PRAYER USED AT THE ANNUAL MEETINGS OF THE SOCIETY AND AT THE OPENING OF MEETINGS OF THE GENERAL COMMITTEE

ALMIGHTY and most merciful FATHER, we give Thee humble thanks for the light of Thy Gospel. Make us more grateful for this Thy mercy, and more zealous for the salvation of all mankind.

Visit in mercy the Church of Christ; enrich it more abundantly with the grace of Thy Holy Spirit; and bless its endeavours to make known Thy Truth. Unite, as one man, all who are truly labouring for Thee. Disappoint the designs of Satan. Let all Christian Societies live in harmony and love; give them wisdom in all their plans; perfect Thy strength in their weakness; and direct their labours to Thy glory.

The harvest truly is great, but the Labourers are few! O Thou Lord of the Harvest, send forth Labourers into Thy Harvest! Fill with Thy Spirit those whom Thou hast sent forth; and enable them faithfully and boldly to preach, among Jews and Gentiles, the unsearchable riches of Christ. Keep them from the snares of the world, the flesh, and the devil; deliver them from all evil; and make them wise to win souls.

Upon all the Native Converts whom Thou hast gathered to Thyself through Thy labouring servants throughout the world pour out Thy Holy Spirit, that as Thou hast begotten them again unto a lively hope, so they may ever be followers of Thee as dear children. Deliver them from all remaining darkness and ignorance; destroy and abolish in their hearts all that remains of Satan's kingdom; grant that their faith and hope and love may grow exceedingly; make them to be ready to every good work, and more especially to exert themselves for the salvation of those around them; that so, by their zeal and faithful testimony, by their holiness and fruitfulness, they may glorify Thy Name before their countrymen, and bring in unto Thee from the midst of them such as shall be saved.

Have compassion, O most merciful Father, on all those who have come under instruction, though they be not yet altogether Christians! Convince them effectually by Thy Word and Spirit of their sinful and miserable state; pour upon them the spirit of grace and supplication, and draw them to Jesus.

Take away blindness from the Jews. Let them receive Thee, O Jesus, as their Messiah, and proclaim Thy saving Name among the Gentiles!

Deliver all Mohammedans from the delusions of the False Prophet. O Thou True Prophet of Thy Church, enlighten them by Thy Holy Spirit, and bow them down at the foot of Thy Cross!

Pity blind Idolaters who are kept in cruel bondage by the god of this world. Turn them from idols, that they may serve the Living and True God.

O Thou Almighty Saviour, Who by the right hand of God art exalted, and hast received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, shed forth His light and grace on this dark world!

Cause all Christians, we beseech Thee, to sow bountifully that they may reap also bountifully. O Thou that lovest a cheerful giver, let all grace abound toward them, that they may minister liberally of their substance to the making known of Thy Name!

With these our humble prayers, we join our praises and thanksgiving for what Thou hast already done in making known Thy salvation; perfect Thy work, O Lord; shortly accomplish the number of Thine elect; and hasten the coming of Thy Kingdom.

Be present with us, O Lord, at this time. Give us all a single eye to Thy glory. May Thy blessing rest upon our meeting; and may all our hearts be this day quickened and encouraged to fresh and persevering efforts in Thy Service.

We ask these mercies for the glory of Thy Name, through the merits and mediation of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; and would ascribe to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, Three Persons in One God, everlasting praise. Amen.

Our Father, which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, As it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, As we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; But deliver us from evil: For Thine is the kingdom, The power, and the glory, For ever and ever. Amen.

PRAYER USED AT THE OPENING OF MEETINGS OF THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, Who hast purchased to Thyself an Universal Church by the precious blood of Thy dear Son, we give Thee hearty thanks that it hath pleased Thee to call us to the knowledge of Thy grace and faith in Thee, and to appoint our lot in an age and country where the true light shineth. We bless Thee that Thou hast awakened us in some measure to feel our responsibilities. We praise Thee for what we have seen and heard of the power of Thy Word among the Heathen; we adore Thee for Thy many servants who have gone out from amongst us to toil, and suffer, and die in making known Thy salvation; and we thank Thee that Thou dost allow us, unworthy sinners, to unite together in this work of faith and labour of love.

We humbly confess our past lukewarmness in this Thy service, notwithstanding these Thine inestimable benefits and mercies. For our Lord Jesus Christ's sake, forgive us our past negligences, and so endue us with Thy Holy Spirit that we may more earnestly seek Thy glory in the salvation of souls.

Grant us, we beseech Thee, Thy very present help at these our meetings. We ask, most gracious God and Father, for a constraining sense of the love of the Lord Jesus, and for wisdom to direct us in all our endeavours. Increase upon us the spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. Give us faith and courage; give us zeal and patience; give us a single eye to Thy glory; and help us to bear and to forbear. The silver and the gold are Thine, O King of kings! Supply us with what is needful for Thy great work, and make us faithful stewards of Thy bounty, for proclaiming to the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ.

We pray also for all who are united with us in the direction of this sacred cause.

May Thine especial blessing rest upon our Committees, with their Secretaries, throughout the world. Bestow on them the help that we feel so needful for ourselves. Enable them to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and ever to find favour in the sight of all with whom they may have to do.

Especially we beseech Thee to look, O most merciful Father, upon our missionary brethren. Draw out our hearts towards them more and more; and while they are bearing the burden abroad, give us grace to help and succour them by our sympathy and prayers at home. Bless every letter written to them from this house, and all our intercourse with them. We pray for them that they may be filled with Thy Spirit. Grant that the same mind may be in them which was also in Christ Jesus. Let them never lose their first love. Raise them above the cares of this world. Help them to deny themselves and to endure all things for the elect's sake. Give them the tongue of him that is taught. Clothe them with humility. Teach them to follow peace with each other, and with all men. Support them under spiritual distresses, temptations of the adversary, bodily sickness, domestic anxieties and hope deferred. And so confirm Thy Word from their lips by the power of the Holy Ghost, that through them multitudes may be turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto Thee, our God.

We commend to Thee the missionaries' children entrusted to our charge. Bring them all to a saving knowledge of Christ Jesus. Defend them with Thy heavenly grace that they may continue Thine for ever, and daily increase in Thy Holy Spirit more and more, until they come unto Thy everlasting kingdom. Give all needed grace to those who have the direction of the Home in the discharge of the arduous work with which Thou hast been pleased to entrust them.

We most heartily thank Thee, O Lord, for those whom Thou hast already sent forth through this Society; and we pray for a yet larger outpouring of a missionary spirit on our younger Clergy, on the members of our Universities, on those who are elsewhere preparing for this holy work, on the young men and women of all ranks and orders throughout our land. And herein do we implore Thy special favour on our Training Institutions, that their numbers may be replenished continually: and that none may go forth from them but such as shall be able ministers of the New Testament, full of faith, and of the Holy Ghost.

We praise Thee, O Thou God of all grace, for the converts, the native catechists, and the native clergy, whom Thou hast granted to us in our several Missions. As Thou hast raised the Native Churches thus far, bring them, we pray Thee, to full ripeness and perfectness of age in Christ. Pour out upon them Thy Holy Spirit. Stablish, strengthen, settle them, and so enlarge their liberality that they may both maintain Thy Word among themselves and may make it known to the regions beyond them, till all the Gentiles hear the glad tidings of Thy love.

And now, O Lord God, be Thou in the midst of us to-day. Give us a constant sense of Thy presence, and may all our undertakings be begun, continued, and ended in Thee, to the honour of Thy great Name, for the sake of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

The COMMITTEE may authorize any Committee appointed under Law XII., and with the consent of the Committee of Correspondence any Committee appointed under Law XV. to deal with and dispose of any matters and classes of matters the consideration of which falls within its province, reporting its action to the next meeting of the COMMITTEE. Subject to the control of the COMMITTEE every Committee may make Bye-laws for its own government, and may appoint Sub-Committees and fix their Quorum.

XX. OF MISSIONARIES

XXVI. Every offer for Missionary Service shall be referred by the Secretaries either to the Committee of Correspondence or in the first instance to the Clerical Sub-Committee or other Committee appointed under Law XVIII. to which it shall belong under rules laid down by the Committee of Correspondence; and the Committee of Correspondence shall have power to deal with the offer, both as to the training and as to the nomination as a Missionary of the Candidate. Provided that no one shall be sent out as a Missionary without having been approved by the Committee of Correspondence; and without, as a general rule, having appeared before them.

XXVII. Candidates nominated by the Committee of Correspondence, and accepted by the COMMITTEE, shall receive instruction in such parts of knowledge, and be prepared in such a manner for their future employment, as the Committee of Correspondence shall judge expedient.

XXVIII. Candidates shall consider themselves engaged to go to any part of the world, and at any time that the COMMITTEE shall decide, and be subject to such regulations as may be established by the COMMITTEE for the direction of the Missionaries: respect, however, being had to their personal circumstances, or to any previous stipulation made by them with the Society.

XXIX. Men who have been duly prepared and finally approved for Missionary work, shall go out, either ordained or unordained, at the discretion of the COMMITTEE.*

XXX. The Missionaries who go out under the direction of this Society shall be allowed to visit home, permission having been previously obtained from the COMMITTEE; and after having laboured in the cause of the Society, to the satisfaction of the COMMITTEE, at the Stations committed to their care, until age or infirmity prevent further exertion, such provision shall be made to render their remaining days comfortable as in the judgment of the COMMITTEE is suitable. The COMMITTEE shall have the power to assist also, in particular cases, the dependent Relatives of those Missionaries who, by devoting themselves to the service of the Society, are prevented from contributing to their support. The COMMITTEE shall be further empowered in special cases to make such arrangements with those employed by them as they may think fit.

GENERAL

XXXI. A friendly intercourse shall be maintained with other Protestant Societies engaged in the same benevolent design of propagating the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

XXXII. All questions relating to matters of Ecclesiastical Order and Discipline, respecting which a difference shall arise between a Bishop of the Church of England abroad and the COMMITTEE, shall, in the absence of any tribunal having legal cognizance of the same, be referred to the Archbishops and Bishops of the Provinces of Canterbury and York, whose decision thereupon shall be binding upon the Society and its agents, and representatives. The proposed reference shall be made by the COMMITTEE, through His Grace the Primate, accompanied by such explanations and statements as the COMMITTEE may deem advisable.

XXXIII. The object of the preceding Law being only to provide a mode of settling questions relating to Ecclesiastical Order and Discipline as to which no provision has yet been made by the Society, it is not to be so construed as in any other respect to alter the principles and practices of the Society, as they are contained in its Laws and Regulations.

XXXIV. It is recommended to every Member of the Society to pray to Almighty God for a blessing upon its designs; under the full conviction that, unless He 'prevent us, in all our doings, with His most gracious favour, and further us with His continual help,' the Society cannot reasonably hope to meet with persons of a proper spirit and qualifications to be Missionaries, or expect their endeavours to be crowned with success.

* The Bishops of the Church of England under the authority of the law of the land ordain and send forth [ecclesiastically speaking] the Society's Missionaries; and in the event of their being appointed by the COMMITTEE to labour at Stations within the jurisdiction of a Bishop of the Church of England abroad, it is the practice of the Society to apply to the Bishop for licences, in which are specified the districts to which the Missionaries have been assigned. This is done on the understanding that licences will neither be refused nor when granted be withdrawn from the Missionaries during their connexion with the Society, except for some assigned legal cause.

NOTES—

Col. 11. A station is a place where at least one foreign missionary resides regularly, or an ordained native with a similar status and responsibility. Different points of occupation in a city are considered as one station.
Col. 12. An out-station is a place, other than a station, with a resident native agent.
Col. 13. Organized congregations are normally those sending delegates to church councils which have taken a permanent form.
Col. 14. Communicants are counted again as baptized adherents.
Col. 17. Definite instruction is contrasted with mere church attendance.

(1) This year for the first time the names of accepted missionaries who had not yet sailed by June 1 are included.

XXX.—EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS, ETC.

Under the heading "Divinity Classes" is included the work of training men to be clergymen, catechists, or evangelists, or women to be Bible women; and under the heading "Normal Classes" the work of training school teachers.

Colleges are entered as first grade when they prepare for the B.A. and higher degrees, and second grade when they do not attain to the B.A. standard, although preparing students for University examinations above that for matriculation.

Under the heading "High Schools" are entered those which read up to a University entrance examination or reach a corresponding standard; in most of them English is taught. Other schools in which the education imparted is higher than that in primary schools at home are entered as lower grade or middle schools.

*The mark * is placed against those institutions which are primarily for Christians. The mark † denotes that the institutions after the names of which it appears do not belong entirely, if at all, to the C.M.S., though in many cases they are manned by the Society's missionaries, and in some are managed by them. The letter (H) after the name of a college or school means that a hostel or boarding house is attached; and where figures are placed immediately after the letter and within the brackets they denote the number of inmates of the hostel.*

It has not been possible in all cases to obtain exact information as to the number of students, etc., but, failing that, approximate figures are usually given. The statistics may be taken as indicating the number of students, etc., at the end of 1914.

XXXI—MEDICAL MISSIONS

Institutions providing accommodation for in-patients and having resident missionary doctors with regular medical diplomas are entered as hospitals. Affiliated dispensaries are indented. Only those are included which are under the superintendence of a fully qualified doctor. Besides these there are many others which are carried on by missionaries possessing some medical knowledge. The figures given, unless otherwise stated, are for the year 1914. M=Men's. W=Women's, G= General.

STATIONS, CLERICAL AND LAY MISSIONARIES, BUSINESS AGENTS, AND NATIVE CLERGYMEN,

On 1 June, 1915

 A STATION is a place where at least one foreign missionary resides regularly, or an ordained native with a similar status and responsibility, so that the place may be occupied by him in one year and by a foreign missionary in another. The main stations (where more than one) in the following list are prefaced by a numeral to promote facility of reference in using the index on p. cxiv. The post-town of each station, when it is known, is given in parenthesis after the name of the station, except in cases where the station is itself a post-town. Where not otherwise stated, it may be assumed that the stations which are not numbered have the same post-town as the main stations after which they appear. For Palestine, where there is no delivery of letters, it is desirable to address letters intended for the stations which are not numbered to the 'care of' one of the missionaries at the main station. The figures immediately after the name of the station or post-town refer to the year in which the station was first occupied.

The figures after the names of the European and Colonial labourers show the year of their first sailing for the Society's Missions, or of their reception into connexion in the field. Their University or College is indicated thus: Oxford, "Oxf."; Cambridge, "Camb."; Birmingham, "Birm."; Dublin, "Dub."; Durham, "Dur."; Edinburgh, "Edin."; Glasgow, "Glas."; Liverpool, "Liv."; London, "Lond."; Manchester, "Manch."; Archbishop of Canterbury's Degree, "Lamb."; Islington, "Isl."; London College of Divinity, "Lond. Coll. Div."; King's College, London, "K.C.L." After the names of men trained at the Society's late Preparatory Institution, first at Clapham but afterwards at Blackheath, the word "Clapham" or "Blackheath" is placed. In the case of women trained at The Willows, Stoke Newington, at The Olives, South Hampstead, at the Society's late Highbury Training Home, or at the C.M.S. Hostel at Highbury, the words "The Willows," "The Olives," "Highbury," or "H'bury Host.," occur after their names. The letter D. after the name of an ordained man, whether European or native, indicates that he was a deacon on 1 June, 1915. The nature of the work of missionaries is indicated in some cases after the date of their joining the staff.

*The mark * before a missionary's name signifies that he or she is specially connected as "Own Missionary" with, and, as regards personal allowances, is wholly or partially supported by, individual friends of the Society or by the Associations or other bodies whose names are given in brackets [thus ( )]. The terms "Hon." and "Partly Hon.," in parenthesis, after the name of a missionary, mean that such missionary draws no allowances, or only a portion of the usual allowances. In the case of the Colonial Associations (N. S. Wales = New South Wales, Vict. = Victoria, New Z. = New Zealand) the missionaries have been selected, and, when necessary, also trained by the Associations, by which likewise they are supported in the field. The Canadian C.M.S. also has selected men and women for the Society's Missions, but they are sent out and supported by the Missionary Society of the Canadian Church (M.S.C.C.), of which the Canadian C.M.S. is financially an integral part. In nearly all the instances referred to, the C.M.S. is responsible for all other than personal allowances, as well as for the expenditure which is involved in the maintenance of the work.*

The mark † denotes that the missionaries to whose names it is prefixed are in local connexion, i.e. that their offers of service were accepted by the Society's representatives in the several Missions, or, in Canada, by the Canadian bishops. Missionaries' wives take the status of their husbands as concerns local connexion.

The names of native clergymen are printed in italics. The figures after their names show the date of ordination as deacon. The mark ‡ denotes that the person to whose name it is prefixed is supported by native church funds, which are in most instances aided by the Society.

The maiden names of wives of European and Colonial missionaries, and the year of marriage, when known, are given in parenthesis. In the case of each woman who was a missionary of the Society before marriage, the Mission in which she laboured and the year of joining it are stated; and in the case of women who were missionaries of other Societies, the initials indicating the Society ("C.E.Z.M.S." = Church of England Zenana Missionary Society; "Z.B.M.M." = Zenana Bible and Medical Mission; "F.E.S." = the late Female Education Society) are given, as well as the country and year of joining. Wives of missionaries are always expected by the Society to lay themselves out to do good among the native women in every practicable way, such as by cultivating familiar intercourse with them, educating children, and instructing the adult women.

The names of all missionaries in the field are placed under the stations at which they were working on 1 June, 1915. The names of those who on that date were at home, or on the way home, or on the way out, are placed under the stations at which they last resided, unless, in the case of those on the way out, they have been definitely assigned to some other station. The names under each station are printed in order of date, without reference to nationality, sex, orders, or other difference; except that the secretaries of Missions are placed first in order at the stations where they reside, and wives of missionaries are placed immediately after their husbands.

At the end of the list are given the names of accepted missionaries who have not yet sailed.

The number of European and Colonial labourers added to the list during the year is 107,(1) viz., 38 in holy orders, 11 laymen, 17 wives, and 41 other women. The names of 68 labourers have been removed from the list through death and other causes. The number of European and Colonial labourers on the list on 1 June, 1915, is 1379. Of these, 992 were, on 1 June, 1915, abroad, viz., 322 ordained men, 80 laymen, 249 missionaries' wives, and 341 other women. At the same date there were 387 missionaries at home, on the Continent, or in the Colonies, viz., 103 ordained men, 40 laymen, 130 missionaries' wives, and 114 other women. The number of Native Clergymen on the list is 476.

The names of retired missionaries who have died during the year are given under the various Missions, and also in Section XII of the Index of Special Topics, p. 249.

(1) "This figure is abnormally large, owing in part to the names of "accepted but not sailed," (p. cxi) being added to the list "this year for the first time. The discrepancy between "the number (9) given on pp. cviii – xi as having been "added in "local connexion", and the number (2) given "on p. 17 is due to the fact that in the former place the "year 2 June 1914 to 1 June 1915 is taken, and "in the latter (figures made up for the anniversary "meeting) 1 May 1914 to 30 April 1915.

THE ANNUAL SERMON

REV. ARTHUR EVELYN BARNES-LAWRENCE, M.A.,

HON. CANON OF SOUTHWARK

An Honorary Life Governor of the Society

"FOR THE WEAPONS OF OUR WARFARE ARE NOT CARNAL, BUT MIGHTY THROUGH GOD TO THE PULLING DOWN OF STRONGHOLDS, CASTING DOWN REASONINGS, AND EVERY HIGH THING THAT EXALTETH ITSELF AGAINST THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD, AND BRINGING INTO CAPTIVITY EVERY THOUGHT TO THE OBEDIENCE OF CHRIST."—2 Cor. x. 4, 5.

NONE but a missionary could have penned those words: perhaps none but a missionary can fully appreciate their triumph. St. Paul is summing up the character of the great campaign in which Christ had made him leader. Well he knew the stubborn resistance of the human heart, how it entrenches itself against God, how it fortifies its strongholds and denies Him entrance. The weapons needed for victory were not those of human manufacture, but "mighty before God," mighty, that is, with divine might.

The Apostle has no deeper conviction than that in advancing the outposts of Christ's Kingdom "the flesh" avails nothing. Search his missionary correspondence, you will find that he sets no store by eloquence, he makes no resort to that "secondary armament" which bulks so largely to-day in the Church's equipment. He is possessed by an overwhelming sense of the glory of the Gospel entrusted to him. The greatness of his message made St. Paul conscious of greatness. He tells us, and history confirms it, that the weapons with which he fought were not human weapons at all, but mighty through God in overthrowing citadels, casting down reasonings, and carrying off as if into slavery every thought into the subjection of Christ.

When he says that his gospel casts down "reasonings," we may be sure that he was the last man to despise intellectual processes; intelligence in faith was as important to St. Paul as it had been to Isaiah seven centuries before. He has in view the boastful sophistries of the schools, the windy philosophies of the time. They had done their utmost, but so far as any real knowledge of God went, they might as well have never been. He will give them no quarter, as he would give none to-day to their modern counterparts. "We have renounced," he says elsewhere in this great letter, "the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, not adulterating God's message, but by a full, clear statement of the truth we strive to commend ourselves, in the presence of God, to every human conscience." The struggle when a human soul comes to grips with the holiness and claims of God is one of life and death, the issues are vital, the weapons of God's servant need to be divine.

This is a solemn time. Never before has our Anniversary been held under circumstances so solemn. The Empire is engaged in a war unequalled in its dimensions, surpassing all others in its millions of combatants and in the issues at stake. Outside this church one edition after another of the evening papers is being bought up by anxious men as we worship here. Forgive me, then, if at such a time I attempt to divert your thoughts to that other warfare, which affects every soul on this planet, whose weapons are not of the flesh, whose issues are eternal.

To do so more intelligently I want to reconstruct the theatre of war that faced St. Paul at the date of this letter. How extraordinarily it differed from ours! Think of a mission field without one of those world religions that confront us! In the year 57 the religions of China, Confucianism and Taoism, were, as now, confined within the Great Wall. Buddhism, already in mortal combat with Pantheism, had not yet been forced to take refuge in China and Japan. Islam, the scourge of an apostate Christendom, was yet unborn. What, then, was this first-century paganism? Some one suggests that it was mythological, remembering how Barnabas was dubbed "Jupiter" and Paul "Hermes" by the pagans of Lystra. But there was no Roman mythology. Intellectually Greece had conquered her Roman conquerors, and Rome had vested her native deities, Jupiter and Juno, with the ill-fitting clothes of Zeus and Hera. But there was no Latin Homer to bring the gods down to earth for converse with men, no Latin Hesiod to sing of Chaos and ancient Night. The Roman gods were mere functionaries of State, a sort of celestial Civil Service, looking after agriculture, horse-breeding, and the like. Like Shintoism, the religion of the Empire was a government department, and its exercise simply a question of bargain between the worshipper and the particular god he patronized. Some one else suggests Mithraism and the Mysteries; but Mithraism, spreading fast from Persia and India, was not yet popular in the Empire, and I doubt whether the Apostle had heard of it.

We come back, then, to the question: What was the heathenism that confronted St. Paul? "It is probably not too hard a thing to say," writes Professor Bigg, "that demon-worship was the really operative religion of the vast mass of the population of the empire." Demons were everywhere propitiated by magic formula and by sacrifice. Human sacrifice was not unknown. Everywhere were sorcerers like Elymas, magicians like Simon, mediums like the Philippian slave girl, exorcists like those sons of Jewish priests at Ephesus. Jupiter, clad as Olympian Zeus, was sufficient deity for festivals and fine weather, but when things went badly, men reverted to demons. "Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols howsoever ye might be led," wrote St. Paul to these Corinthian Christians; and again, "The things which the Gentiles sacrifice they sacrifice to devils and not to God." At the heart of Roman paganism lay devil-worship. And along with this was a debased fetishism. Ephesus might shout: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," but the real object of its worship was not many-breasted Artemis, but the black meteoric stone which fell from the sky, and was probably enshrined within the body of the Greek idol. Belief in dreams and omens was so common that almost every one, high and low, was ridden by these miserable obsessions, and, like Pilate's wife, "suffered many things" in consequence. When night fell the world of the Roman citizen was haunted by ghosts. Petronius, elegantiæ arbiter, the boon companion of Nero, was afraid to walk out in the dark.

I confess that St. Paul's missionary greatness stands out with extraordinary distinctness as I study the heathenism of his day. In the great cities such as Rome and Antioch wickedness had reached its zenith. In the decadence of Cæsarism a Roman satirist could groan over the influx of Eastern depravity poured into the Tiber by the Syrian Orontes. In Antioch, city of wits and philosophers, there was no religion to serve as a bulwark against the flood of sensuality. What religion there was "took the shape of nature-worship or the most imbecile superstition." And even Antioch was outdone by "the regions of Phrygia and Galatia." What of Derbe and Lystra? "It is true," says Sir William Ramsay, "that the tone of Greek society and religion were low, and Christianity was necessarily an enemy to them, but Greek society and life were at least founded upon marriage; the religion of Asia Minor was based on the central principle that all marriage was an outrage on the free, unfettered life of nature." This is confirmed by the awful picture of the sensuality of the heathen world in Romans i.

St. Paul's mission field then was so different from ours that we may think (some do think) that his weapons are out-of-date, an equipment of archaic interest, like the old matchlocks that hang in museums. Different it certainly was, but I am bold to say that it is all to our gain that he knew nothing of the organized world-religions of the twentieth century. To have watched St. Paul deal with Confucianism, Pantheism, Buddhism, and Islam would of course have simplified the Church's task, but I do not think it would have strengthened the Church's faith and experience to copy rather than to initiate. Different it was, and we may be thankful, but the permanent gain to us of these New Testament pages lies here, that at back of all the specialized developments of the modern mission field lie precisely those principles of heathenism that St. Paul dealt with, and teaches us to deal with. Study Animism and polytheism, or climb to the philosophical conceptions of India, and everywhere at back of them you will find the devil-worship, sorcery, magic, "science falsely so called," and above all, the prevailing sensuality, which confronted the great Apostle as he girded himself for his task, ever hampered, remember, by his own countrymen and by Judaizing Christians.

The weapons which proved so efficacious in his hands are needed to-day, perhaps never more so. I admit that the panoply of God is complex. The Kingdom of God contains many powers. Different peoples in different ages call into play a great variety of its living forces. To the Jew the appeal of the Gospel lies in fulfilled prophecy, to the Greek in true wisdom, to the Roman in a perfect law. I do not forget how Harnack says of the mission preaching of the early Church: "In innumerable cases decision was produced by one single ray of light; one man was gained by the Old Testament, another by the exorcism of demons, a third by the purity of Christian life, another by monotheism, or by the prospect of eternal life, or by the depth of its speculation." Admitting this to the full, yet as the light of modern Missions is flashed back upon those of the primitive Church, as we gather up our missionary experience and lay it alongside St. Paul's, the weapons "mighty before God" appear in the main to be three, and of these I would emphasize first—

I. Personal Conviction.—Can any one study St. Paul without seeing that the secret of his missionary power, the sustained motive of his "labours more abundant," was a deep personal conviction as to his relation to Jesus Christ our Lord? I need not argue the point. "I know," said this greatest of missionaries, as he felt the world slipping beneath his feet, "I know Him in Whom I have believed." That dying confession sums up the experience of a lifetime. It does more, it accounts for the positive tone of St. Paul's message, it is the secret of its certainty: "As God is true, our word toward you (Corinthians) was not yea and nay, for the Son of God Who was preached among you by us, by me and Silvanus and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in Him is Yea." Personal conviction was his first weapon. And I urge the point because the great characteristic common to all heathenism is uncertainty. No gospel will appeal to the heathen that does not meet his innate hunger for certainty. On all the deepest things the heathen is conscious of ignorance, "an infant crying in the dark." A positive message based on personal conviction is his first need. Let me illustrate. The heathenism of this England of ours in the seventh century closely resembled the heathenism of Galatia and Phrygia in St. Paul's time, and I recall that memorable day in A.D. 627 when Edwin of Northumbria, convinced of the truth of Christianity himself, summoned his chieftains to meet Paulinus, the friend of Augustine, at Godmundham, near York. Solemn was the question before them—should they renounce the old gods of the north for the faith of the people whom they had expelled from the land? The missionary pleaded well. The issue turned upon one point: Was Paulinus sure of his message? Just then a storm-driven bird, attracted by the light of the hall of meeting, flew through the door and then out again into the darkness of the night. "Such," said an Engle chief, "appears to be the life of man: out of the darkness he comes, into the darkness he disappears, but whither? If the new faith can answer that, surely we should be wise men to adopt it." Where did certainty lie? was the crucial question. You recall Palgrave's version of the Engle chieftain's speech:—

> But if this pale Paulinus
> Have somewhat more to tell,
> Some news of whence and whither
> And where the soul may dwell.
> If in that outer darkness
> The sun of hope may shine,
> He makes life worth the living,
> I take his God for mine.

And then rose Coifi, the pagan high priest, and said: "Come, let us destroy these useless temples and altars," and hurling his spear into the idol house, he set it on fire. The general adoption of Christianity in the northern kingdom was the result of Paulinus' personal conviction of the truth of his message. Yes, men's hearts crave for certainty—Islam has learned the importance of that. Even a false faith will be accepted by pagans if it is asserted without doubt by men who believe it.

The first weapon, then, of the missionary is plain—he needs certitude of conviction, a certitude that does not spring of argument and disputation, because the thing proclaimed lies beyond the region of logic and historic evidence. The true missionary will never tell the heathen that Christianity is simply a higher form of his own religion. He will make it clear that he is proclaiming that on which eternal issues hang for himself, something for which he is willing to lay down his life. If he cannot do that, he had better stay at home; he will never persuade the heathen to exchange the traditions of his fathers for a religion which does not claim to be final and absolute. I believe that one principal reason of the successful work of our Society in every part of the mission field lies in the extreme care of its Committee that the men and women it sends forth from time to time have first and foremost that experimental knowledge of Jesus Christ exhibited so markedly in St. Paul. God give us men of intellectual calibre like his, capable of dealing with the problems of modern thought; above all, may He give us men possessed by "the full assurance of faith." Certitude does not beget intolerance. The true missionary will never be intolerant. The heathen's superstition is, after all, his religion. He is "a man waiting under the stars for the rising of the sun." Was ever missionary more tolerant to the heathen than our Apostle? Yet who gave his message with greater conviction? As the pagans of Lystra listened to that small, eager man, so persuasive, so piercing, it seemed to them that the messenger of the gods himself must be among them. The man was part of his message. It is always so.

II. What, then, was the truth St. Paul began by proclaiming? Were I to define it in cold, theological fashion, I should call it the Christian doctrine of God, and cold indeed it would be as a summary of those burning words in which it was his wont to tear aside the veil and reveal to dim eyes the One living and true God.

We are all apt, I suppose, to think that what appeals most to ourselves will at once appeal to the heathen. I doubt if I should have begun where St. Paul begins. But in studying the Report of the Edinburgh Conference, I was struck by the concurrent testimony that the opening message of the missionary is nearly always the Christian doctrine of God. Christian monotheism lays the axe at the root of superstition, even in Islam. That interested me much, and when so enlightened I turned back to St. Paul I found that our modern method was his also. His message, whether in cultured Athens, or in barbarous Lycaonia, was one and the same: "What ye ignorantly worship, Him declare I unto you."

The missionary's Gospel, then, opens with an unveiling of God. That is something new. The religious knowledge of the heathen comes from his fathers, not from the gods. He is bound and fettered by tradition. St. Paul does not dilate on who God is, but on what God does. The deeds of the living God, Who made heaven and earth, Who gives us shower and sunshine, Who loves men, Who quickens the dead, constitute his opening message. The first conscious need of the heathen is not pardon but deliverance; deliverance from demons, deliverance from the power of sin. His need is a personal, almighty God.

It is just here that the peculiar value of the Old Testament stories becomes manifest. We are told that the young missionary who longs to impart the deeper truths of God is compelled, by his defective knowledge of the language and of the mental life of the people, to confine himself to Bible stories. They always fascinate, they always educate. The heathen who hears of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, insensibly learns, as did we at our mother's knee, what sin, disobedience, humility, faith, and love are. He learns Who God is, a divine Person Who cares for sinful men, reveals Himself, and wins them to His love.

What an apologia we have here for those Old Testament narratives that some modern scholarship impugns! Friends of mine are alarmed at the Higher Criticism. I do not share that fear. My fears are rather for some of the higher critics. The criticism itself is perfectly legitimate, it has solid value. The Edinburgh Conference told us that in most parts of the mission field it is useless to the missionary; that in some, such as Japan, it is a necessary part of his knowledge. Earnestly I trust that friends of the C.M.S. may await with quiet confidence the final results of this critical method. Finality is still far distant. We are apt to forget that Higher Criticism is still a young science, and shares to the full the venturesomeness of youth. Its "assured results" are often mere subjective guesses. As Christian men we should not be alarmed. Even if we think it, as some do, an attack upon the Bible, such an attack would reassure me. What would alarm me more than anything would be if the Bible ceased to be attacked. That would mean that it was no longer thought worth attacking. Meanwhile Warneck has well said:—

> In face of a criticism that seeks to deny the authenticity of Christ's parting command, God brings in a missionary century and translates that command into deed. A more powerful irony upon negative criticism there could not be. We are face to face with the fact of Christian world-missions, and the commission to which they owe their existence is declared never to have been given at all. The words of Jesus may be declared dead, they cannot be made dead.

And so it is with these Old Testament stories. Their authenticity is confirmed in their use. Dead mythologies do not quicken dead souls: "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." Divine power pulsates in these ancient records. They prepare the way of the Lord. The great architect who built this church and other City churches, did so with definite purpose to prepare the Londoner's eye to appreciate his masterpiece, St. Paul's Cathedral. And so the lives of patriarch and prophet were given by the Spirit of God to make men ready for God's final self-revelation in Jesus Christ.

A revelation of God! Have we not had one ourselves since our last Anniversary? Nine months ago the nation appeared to thoughtful men to be on the verge of political, social, and religious bankruptcy. Great movements seemed impotent to realize themselves. "The children had come to the birth, and there was not strength to bring forth." A feeling of despair was settling down upon us, and then suddenly God Himself intervened. Will any one deny that? It is not too much to say that the nation became conscious of God in our midst, and fell upon its knees. We can appreciate better than before what the vision of God means to the heathen. We were nearly over Niagara when God plucked us back. May He, of His mercy, keep us on our knees. The days are highly critical, and while I am persuaded of our final victory, that will depend, not upon "God being on our side," as men talk, but upon our being on God's side. I doubt if we have learned our lesson; may we learn it soon:—

> Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
> Lest we forget, lest we forget.

III. I come now to St. Paul's greatest weapon—the Cross. "I determined," says St. Paul, "not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." Do not, I beseech you, misuse those words. They are constantly misused, as if they were the sum and substance, the end and height, of Apostolic doctrine. They are certainly not a motto for Evangelical Churchmen. They indicate a condition to be deplored, not a model to be followed. They were extorted from St. Paul by the carnality of the Corinthian Church, which was so blinded that deeper teaching, such as "the mystery of God," must be postponed, he must hark back to elementary truth. But, that said, the words suffice our purpose to-day. The preaching of Christ crucified may be elementary, St. Paul would certainly tell us that it is essential. If he can use no other weapon of his warfare, this is indispensable; if he flings all others aside, he will hold to this. That is a notable fact. It means that the missionary who did most for the world trusted absolutely to the proclamation of the death of Christ. You observe he does not spend his time in explaining how it ought to influence men, it is his business so to present it that it does influence men. He has no particular theory of the Atonement, but he would, if possible, placard the world with "the word of the Cross." In these days of multiplied theories it is well to remember this. There is that in Christ's Death which transcends all human knowledge, and St. Paul says in effect: You need not bid men repent and believe; if the preaching of the Cross does not make them believe, no telling of yours will make them. This is simple fact.

On the wall of the guard-room on the Palatine, in which the Apostle underwent his first imprisonment, was discovered a rude sketch of a man with the head of an ass nailed to a cross. At its foot kneels a Roman soldier and underneath is the legend: "Alexamines worships his God." In that coarse way some fellow-soldier had jeered at Alexamines' faith in Christ. Now in that rough outline, scored on the plaster with the end of a burnt stick, was concentrated all the scorn of the Roman world for a crucified Saviour. It expressed all that St. Paul means by "the offence (lit. the scandal) of the Cross." Yet it was a crucified Saviour Who was to conquer that Roman world: "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me; this spake Jesus signifying what death He should die." The Cross is a true magnet, one pole repellent, the other attractive. Where does its offence lie? Not in the demand it makes upon us. So far as it calls for self-sacrifice, men are pleased to listen and to some extent obey; it lies rather here, that it strips a man bare of his own righteousness, and convicts him of sin. When God gave His Son to be a sacrifice for sin He "condemned sin in the flesh." I put that first in my thought about Calvary. Sin is a different thing since the Crucifixion. The disciples looked at it one way before Christ died, and another way afterwards. "I never knew what repentance meant," said Luther, "until I saw it in the wounds of Jesus." Is not that so with each one of us here? Whenever I go back to Calvary I am conscious of being searched through and through. I cry: "Thou hast set my secret sins in the light of Thy countenance." I cannot think of sin, my sin, lightly in presence of the Cross. I cry perforce: "God be merciful to me the sinner." The Cross reveals me to myself, and what it does for me I know it will do for others, it will "convict the world of sin."

It does more, it tells me of expiation and atonement. Christ's assertion is absolute: "This is My Blood of the new covenant which is shed for you and for many for the remission of sins." Is there any way of remission but that of expiation? I know none, nor do I need to know—"He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the whole world." And yet once more, I find at Calvary the assurance of the efficacy of the Atonement in my particular case. The Cross is the trysting-place where God meets and pardons me. "The Son of God loved me and gave Himself for me," said the Apostle, and I may say it too. Is there any way of salvation but this? If there is, let me know it. If there is any other place where conviction of sin, knowledge of atonement, and assurance of pardon can become mine, tell me where it is.

All this may sound strange to modern ears, it was not strange once. I look down the centuries: I think of the Apostolic fathers, their message is the Cross; I recall the noble army of martyrs, Polycarp, Justin, Perpetua, the long bright train of witnesses to the power of that Death which was their life—I think of the missionaries who came West, like our Apostle, and again of their converts who slowly won Europe for Christ, of Ulpilas who freed the Goth and Vandal with no other weapon than the Cross. I recall our own island history, and find that the secret of Columba and Aidan, of Cuthbert and Augustine was no other than this. In the sixteenth century it was the message of the Cross that gave us the Reformation and our Church as it is. In the eighteenth century Wesley and Whitfield evangelized a semi-pagan England by this same Gospel, and to-day, when half the world is engaged in desperate conflict, do we not feel that its greatest need is the knowledge of the Cross? Were the Christian nations truly Christian, this war could never have begun. The world's greatest need to-day is Jesus Christ.

God is burning into the nations the conviction that civilization and culture are no substitutes for the Gospel. It was in that conviction that our fathers founded this Society. What a time it was! At home corn laws that made wild discontent, schools few and far between, Bibles hardly to be found, no new churches, the clergy and ministers sunk in spiritual indifference. Abroad, a great European war, and no missionary work in the regions beyond. The men who founded the C.M.S. in 1799 altered the whole condition of England, and that because they put first things first. It was slow work; it was not till 1815, just a century ago, the year of Waterloo, that the first three English clergymen sailed. Looking back, we can but cry: "What hath God wrought!" Looking forward, we humbly claim the promise: "Thou shalt see greater things than these." "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." We hold fast by that.

Once again it is a time of grave national anxiety. We are again passing through a time of suffering on an unprecedented scale. Again the supporters of the Church Missionary Society gather to affirm that the future of our dear land and Empire is bound up with obedience to our Lord's last command, and never before in the whole history of the world have opportunities so many, open doors so effectual, been presented to us. Answers to prayer are calls to sacrifice. Let the sound of battle within earshot of our shores bring us to our knees confessing the world's sin and our own sin which have brought these judgments upon us. Let us pray for a deepened vision of the Cross, its message of love, sacrifice, and cleansing, till each of us can say: "The love of Christ constraineth us." Let us pray for the manifested unity of all God's children at home and in the mission field, and especially of those belonging to the countries now at war. Let us pray, each one of us, cleric or lay, that we may personally make ampler use of "the weapons of our warfare." They are "mighty in God's sight," let them be so in ours. There are, it may be, difficulties in our parishes, in our homes, in our hearts, strongholds of sin and unbelief which defy us. God's weapons are formed with the precise purpose of casting them down, and bringing every thought to the obedience of Christ. God can use any one if he is but useable. Remember that it is not our strength He needs, but our weakness laid at His feet. In the very context of my text St. Paul confesses that men said of him, "His personal presence is unimpressive, and as for eloquence, he has none": yet his weapons did their work.

It may be that the Lord's return is close upon us. If so, may He find us doing His work, finishing, as He did Himself, the work the Father has given us to do, that we "may have confidence, and not be ashamed before Him at His coming."

PROCEEDINGS AT THE 116TH ANNIVERSARY

At the Annual Meeting of the Church Missionary Society, held at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, London, on Tuesday, 4 May, 1915, being the Society's 116TH Anniversary, The Right Hon. SIR JOHN H. KENNAWAY, Bt., C.B., President, in the Chair, succeeded by COLONEL SIR R. WILLIAMS, Bt., M.P., after reading of Scripture and Prayer, "The General Review of the Year" was presented, and, on the motion of the Rev. B. Baring-Gould, seconded by T. F. Victor Buxton, Esq., the following Resolution was adopted :—

That the General Review of the Year which has just been presented, together with the Report, be adopted, printed, and circulated under the direction of the Committee; that the thanks of the Meeting be given to the Rev. Canon A. E. Barnes-Lawrence for his Sermon before the Society last evening, and that it be printed and circulated; that Colonel Sir Robert Williams, Bt., M.P., be the Treasurer of the Society; and that the Committee be appointed for the ensuing year, with power to fill vacancies.

After which, on a motion by the Rev. E. H. M. Waller, seconded by Professor A. Carless, it was resolved :—

That this Meeting of the Church Missionary Society desires to praise Almighty God for His continued mercy in permitting them to carry on His work in many lands even during this year of War.

They thankfully recognize that, while the gifts prompted by the spirit of self-sacrifice vouchsafed at Swanwick and afterwards enabled the Society to face the financial strain of this time, the devotion of God's people has continued to support the work throughout the year. They are glad to note that, while there is a deficit, there is, nevertheless, a substantial increase in the contributions from Associations as compared with those of two years ago. It is this fact which leads them to hope that a financial position, which would otherwise entail severe retrenchment, may be regarded as God's summons to follow up the self-sacrifice of Swanwick by increasing the permanent income through the regular giving and gathering of small gifts. They pray that thus there may be such an increased income assured, that God will enable the Society to maintain that witness to the Person and work of our Lord for which it was called into existence and which the War has revealed as the supreme need of the world.

The following Meetings were also held in London in connexion with the Anniversary :—

On May 4, at the C.M. HOUSE, Salisbury Square, at 3 P.M. (for women), Mrs. Randall Davidson in the Chair;

And on May 7, at QUEEN'S HALL, Langham Place, at 7 P.M. (Medical Mission Auxiliary), the Right Rev. Bishop Ingham in the Chair.

Addresses were delivered at these meetings by the Right Rev. Bishop Welldon, the Rev. Dr. A. A. David, the Rev. J. H. Ritson, Dr. Lilias M. Blackett (Punjab), Dr. J. H. Cook (Uganda), Dr. R. J. H. Cox (Punjab), the Rev. W. H. Elwin (Chekiang), the Rev. E. J. T. Stanley (Fukien), the Rev. Canon R. Sterling (Palestine), Miss K. M. Strong (Palestine), Miss D. Stubbs (Fukien), the Rev. H. Sykes (Palestine), and the Rev. S. C. Webb (Palestine).

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE

General Review of the Year

[READ AT THE ANNIVERSARY IN QUEEN'S HALL, 4 MAY, 1915]

"My power is made perfect in weakness."—2 Cor. xii. 9 (R.V.).

On no occasion has an anniversary of the Society been held under circumstances of deeper solemnity. The greatest Christian nations are engaged in a war which surpasses all the wars in history in the number of combatants, the expenditure of life and material, and the moral and spiritual issues at stake. The war has revealed the world's supreme need of the Gospel of redemption and peace at the very time when the non-Christian nations have become more accessible than ever before to that Gospel. The war has increased the opportunity and responsibility of the Christian Church.

Africa: The war

The Africa Missions have been more affected by the war than any others, with the exception of Palestine and Turkish Arabia. The only missionary of the Society who has lost his life through the war was the Rev. Alec Field, a young and most devoted worker, returning to his Mission in West Africa in the s.s. "Falaba," which was sunk by a German submarine. Two other missionaries (one the son of Prebendary Fox), his fellow-passengers, were mercifully preserved. Several more—both men and women—on other occasions, have been exposed to similar peril. On the other side of the continent, since the commencement of the war, the missionaries in German East Africa have been completely cut off, but from several sources we have been assured that they were safe and free to continue their work. Much prayer has been called out on behalf of our brethren, and the Committee would express their truest sympathy with their relatives and friends. The work in parts of British East Africa and Uganda has been considerably affected by large numbers of people being called to act as carriers and working in different ways in connexion with the war, and the Mengo hospital has been used as a base hospital for British troops. In Sierra Leone, Fourah Bay College has been occupied by German prisoners. In some districts, especially in West Africa, the people have suffered through the war's influence on trade.

Nigeria

Nearly all our missionaries in their letters urge the need of reinforcements. In many parts of Nigeria the door is wide open for a great spiritual harvest, which depends, under God, simply upon the supply of men to gather it in. The mission conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Trevelyan Snow early in the year proved a great blessing to many of our Christian congregations in the Southern Provinces of Nigeria. In the Nupé Country, mainly a Moslem district, of which Bida is the centre, a real movement in favour of Christianity is reported. The Cambridge University Missionary Party at Panyam have been encouraged by "progress all along the line," despite some great difficulties. Both at Panyam and Zaria the first Christian marriages have been solemnized.

The new Government code issued for that country emphasizes in a marked way the necessity of religion in any true system of education, and the Governor's memorandum recognizes that "religion is a force in the formation of character and of good citizens which cannot be neglected without disastrous results."

Uganda

The sudden death of Bishop Tucker on June 15 came as a great shock to the whole Church and specially to the Church of Uganda. The Archbishop of Canterbury, in his address at the Memorial Service in St. Bride's Church, said :—

> I believe that if we could look on for 500 years, we should find that the name of Alfred Tucker will then be prized and commemorated along with those of the master builders of the Kingdom of the Lord Christ among the sons of men. . . . It fell to that great man within the compass of one generation to lead those folk from slavery and devil worship to the ordered life of a great Christian community.

The Investiture of the Kabaka of Uganda took place at Budo on November 7, on the hill whither for generations past the Kabakas have repaired for their formal recognition. For the first time in history it was a Christian service, solemnized by a Christian bishop, and the Kabaka dedicated himself not to the local spirits but to the living God. Not the least significant feature of the ceremony was that his wife (a daughter of a native clergyman and educated in our girls' boarding school) sat beside him on her throne, and was crowned with a silver circlet, an act which should help much to raise the status of womanhood in Uganda.

Bishop Willis, since his return, has been visiting many parts of his diocese, where he has found a continuance of strong evangelistic work and a large number of baptisms, but has had to face a position of temporary difficulty in some districts through a movement described as "Anti-Doctor."

Anglo-Egyptian Sudan

Pioneer work among the pagan tribes in the south of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan has shown signs of progress, and the first conversions have been reported. The beginning of work among women and girls has been made possible through the arrival of the wives of two of the missionaries. The new hospital at Omdurman was dedicated by Bishop Gwynne early in the year.

In Egypt the number of baptisms has been fewer than last year, and the earlier months were characterized by unusually bitter and determined opposition. The agitation which was being carried on by means of meetings and pamphlets largely ceased at the outbreak of the war. No unsettlement in the work has been caused through the war, but the large number of troops stationed in Cairo has made considerable demands upon the time and strength of some of our missionaries. At the confirmation held by Bishop Gwynne in the summer more candidates were presented than on any previous occasion. The opening of the new school premises and church at Menouf marks a fresh step in the work in the Delta. The assistance of the natives of Egypt was asked for, and among other subscribers were Moslems, Copts, Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, members of the Greek Church, and Plymouth Brethren. Egypt

The appointment of Canon Rennie MacInnes, who for the last eleven years has been secretary of the Egypt and Northern Sudan Mission, as Bishop in Jerusalem, in succession to the late Bishop Blyth, has given great pleasure to the Committee and the whole Society. He has commenced his new task at a very critical time, and for the present is devoting himself to the Egyptian part of his diocese until he can take up his residence in Jerusalem.

The position in Palestine quickly became anxious after the commencement of the war owing to the uncertainty of Turkish movements, as well as to the abrogation of the Capitulations, which had earlier brought our missionaries under Turkish law. The majority of the Society's missionaries were recalled to England or went to Egypt, but work was for a time carried on at Gaza, Jaffa, Jerusalem, and Nazareth. The few who remained were, on the whole, well treated, though Dr. Sterling was imprisoned for some days in Gaza. Five C.M.S. missionaries were interned at Jerusalem, but through the invaluable help of the American Consul, Dr. Glazebrook, they were allowed to leave, and reached Alexandria on December 28. All medical and educational institutions have been closed, but the native church council work is going on, and, excepting at Jaffa, services are being held as usual. Happily, it has been possible to leave some financial provision for the pastors and other workers. The Christians throughout the country, though naturally alarmed for a time, have so far escaped any bad treatment. Palestine

Our work in Persia has been able to proceed much as usual. At Ispahan the outlook is bright and conditions increasingly favourable. There is no longer the old terror of confessing Christ, but a certain boldness in letting relatives know when heart and faith are changed, and a healthy profession before converts and inquirers. On Easter Day, 1914, there were 628 in church besides a small overflow service. Many of the villages, especially round Ispahan, are now open to evangelistic work. Bahaism, which has Persia made many converts from Islam and Zoroastrianism, is proving a hindrance to the spread of Christianity among some classes. A great scholar and devoted missionary has passed away in the person of the Rev. Dr. Robert Bruce, founder of the Mission, which has also sustained a heavy loss by the death at Kerman of Miss Mary Bird, whose influence among the women was so remarkable that she was often described as the best-loved woman in southern Persia.

India: The war

Nothing connected with the war has stirred the whole empire more than the sacrifices made by every class in India for the common weal. The war has created a new bond of sympathy between Englishmen and India; it has drawn widely separated classes closer together; it has solemnized many; it has vastly increased the responsibilities of the Christian Church. The bond of sympathy created by the war has given the missionary a new and increased opportunity. One writes: "I doubt if the Christian message was ever listened to with such attention as at present."

Indian Church

The year has been marked by the centenaries of the episcopate in India and of the first arrival of C.M.S. missionaries. One great result of the hundred years' work is seen in the responsibilities now being carried by the Indian Church, and in Indian clergymen again and again taking charge of work previously superintended by the missionaries. If the Indian Church is to develop, such responsibilities must be increased more and more, and great advance is urgently needed in the numbers of the Indian clergy. A new effort to provide a larger number of them for the rapidly increasing village congregations is being made in the Lahore Diocese, where the Bishop is ordaining both priests and deacons for village work with the clear understanding that they devote their lives to this special ministry. The Bishop of Lahore by a grant of £2000 out of the sum placed at his disposal from the Pan-Anglican Thankoffering, has made it possible to open a new training school at Clarkabad in the Punjab, named after Bishop Lefroy, for the preparation of a humble but invaluable class of village readers, who can teach the children, instruct the congregations committed to their charge, and do something to bridge the periods between the visits of the ordained pastor. In South India also it is encouraging to learn from Travancore that a larger number of old students from the Cambridge Nicholson Institution at Kottayam have been ordained during 1914 than in any previous year. In Ceylon an interesting effort to give periodic training to catechists has been commenced through the establishment of a Training Colony.

Mass movements

The mass movement is still the most urgent problem before the Church. In the Punjab the gathering in of precious souls is only hindered by lack of workers. In Western India, among the Mahars, baptism has had to be withheld in some places because there were not enough workers to cope with the inquirers. In the United Provinces, particularly in the districts round Meerut and Aligarh, village after village is asking for teachers, and bazaar and village preaching has had to be stopped at Aligarh as all the workers are needed to instruct converts. It is said that with increased efforts a mass movement of the whole race of the Santals might result, but with the present staff no forward movement is possible. There is a similar hopefulness in the Gond Mission. The one solution of the mass movement problem lies in the training of a greater force of Indian workers. How would Christianity flourish in rural England if ninety per cent of the people were wholly illiterate, and there were no resident clergymen in fully ninety per cent of the villages containing Christians?

Work among the educated classes

While the mass movements afford a unique opportunity for a rapid expansion of the Church, the ultimate evangelization of India requires acceptance of the Christian message by the educated classes and leaders of Indian thought. The work among them is far more difficult, and because it is going on to a great extent below the surface it is less fully understood. Yet the opportunities are great. In Bombay Canon Joshi has established a hostel for converts from the higher grades of society, with most encouraging results. Thirty have been admitted for longer or shorter periods, and seventeen have been baptized during the year, while almost every day others visit the hostel for interviews and discussion. The influence of those who as boys and young men have spent their most impressionable years under Christian teachers is telling more and more. Through the aid of large grants from the Government, St. Paul's College at Calcutta, after many vicissitudes, has, under Mr. Holland as principal, taken its place among the Christian colleges in India. A striking testimony to the appreciation of Christian teaching has come from Peshawar, where the future of Edwardes College was jeopardized by the opening of a strong Mohammedan college. Under the brave leadership of Mr. Hoare our college held its own and its numbers actually increased. The new college hostel at Kottayam was opened on July 1, and forty-one Christian students are in residence. It is impossible to over-estimate the value of our educational work.

Education

The link between our educational and evangelistic work is being steadily strengthened. At Agra a district with a very large village population has been handed over to St. John's School as a school mission, and has been put under the charge of the Rev. Dina Nath, one of the staff. At Calcutta the St. Paul's Brotherhood, consisting of old boys of St. Paul's School, sends its members out for several days together to do evangelistic work in village districts. From many of our colleges Christian students teach in the bazaar, and are responsible for Sunday schools. It is also encouraging to read of a marked increase in social service. The boys of the Srinagar High School did yeoman service during the cholera epidemic which visited Kashmir this year. The boys of the Training School, Krishnagar, are much in request in cases of illness. Though many of them are Brahmans they do not allow caste restrictions to interfere in this service. Trinity College, Kandy, continues to inculcate the spirit of social service amongst its students with marked success.

Education among women and girls

The widespread demand for the education of women and girls, which was referred to in the last "General Review," is steadily growing. Openings for teaching in zenanas are far beyond the time and strength of our present workers, and requests for girls' schools to be opened have had to be refused. The plans for a United Women's College in Madras, in which the C.M.S. is taking part, have now matured, and Miss McDougall, vice-principal of Westfield College, Hampstead, has been appointed the first principal.

Sale of Scriptures and other Christian literature

One of the most remarkable features of the past year has been the great sale of the Scriptures. Dr. A. Neve reports from Kashmir that during the year the sale of Scripture portions at the hospital has exhausted a further edition. Another worker writes: "It is quite common in a new village to meet men who tell us that they have a gospel at home." At a Mohammedan festival there was an eagerness to buy Scripture portions that was truly remarkable, and missionary after missionary reports sales far beyond any in the past. There has also been a great request for Christian literature, which reaches where the missionary cannot go.

General progress

In spite of increased opposition from Mohammedans, Theosophists, and the Arya Samaj, the teaching of Christ is steadily permeating the thought of India and gaining adherents. Less ignorance and bigotry, a wider knowledge and appreciation of our principles and aims, a more general acquaintance with the Gospels themselves, a growing number of leading men who recognize Christian ideals as the purest and highest which are being put forth before their country, and the ever-increasing momentum of the mass movement in the villages—all these mark definitely the progress that is being made.

China: Jubilee of Protestant missions in Hangchow

In China an interesting event has been the jubilee of the Protestant missions in Hangchow, which was celebrated at the end of December, the Rev. G. E. Moule, afterwards Bishop, having taken a house and begun work in Hangchow in November, 1864, the first Protestant missionary to take up residence in an inland city of China. The Rev. H. W. Moule, a son of the Bishop, Mr. Taylor, a son of Hudson Taylor, and Mr. Judson, a relative of Adoniram Judson, took part in the celebration. Hardly any city in China shows more the results of the changes that are taking place, with its railway station, main streets lighted by electricity, long boulevard by the lake side where the city wall has been pulled down, model city replacing the Manchu quarter, and a people accessible to the Christian message.

Many missionaries in their annual letters refer to the great increase in idol worship. They tell of idol shrines and temples which have long been allowed to be dilapidated being well repaired and re-decorated, of an idol procession costing £3000, of "a remarkable and terrible revival of idolatry." There is also a revival of Confucianism, encouraged by the authorities in Peking; but it was clearly stated by Yuan Shih-Kai, when he recently worshipped at the Altar of Heaven, that Confucianism was in no way being established as the national religion. Increase in idol worship

Yet it can be thankfully stated that officials, students, merchants, and women are all remarkably open to influence, and that the prospects of the Church were never brighter. In Western China, for example, where conditions are in many ways more difficult than in other parts, in the course of a mission held in several centres, in one place special gatherings for the gentry and scholars were attended by the mandarin and his staff, the city officials, heads of schools and colleges, the local member of the provincial parliament, and all the leading gentry. A women's meeting held at the same time was also crowded. Openings among officials, etc.

The value of the Church as an element of permanent strength is being realized by many through the very unsettlement of the country, "the Church is the one stable element in China," being the testimony of a Chinese. Stability of the Church

Premises have been purchased in Yunnanfu, and the new work in this capital of the great province of Yunnan, hitherto unentered by the C.M.S., has commenced. Advance has also been made into the city of Nanning, the new capital of the province of Kwangsi. Through the Swanwick Building Fund land and buildings have been purchased in Canton, and our brethren in that city are rejoicing at the new opportunities thus afforded. This purchase is interesting because the site for 300 years was occupied by Buddhist monks, and was tenanted by a large number of idols when we took possession. Yunnan occupied

Encouraging reports come from many of our colleges and schools. Some of the elder boys in St. Paul's School, Kong Kong, have been speaking in the preaching hall in the middle of the town to an audience of 200 men; they are also responsible for three Sunday schools. In St. Stephen's Girls' College, some eighty of the girls are members of the Scripture Union, and their deepening earnestness is shown not only in their school life, but in their influence at home. St. John's Hall, the C.M.S. hostel for students at Hong Kong University, has been enlarged, and earnest prayer is asked for a number of students who are facing a decision for Christ. During the past year the Society has joined with other societies in the formation of Educational work the Union Theological College at Canton. St. Mark's College, Foochow, is now affiliated with St. John's University, Shanghai, the college of the American Episcopal Church. The much needed new buildings for the boys' school at Mienchow, Western China, have been erected. Plans are in preparation for the C.M.S. to take a share in the Union University at Chengtu, and then a graduated system of Christian schools will be complete, rising from the village schools, through the secondary schools, to the Union University. Meanwhile, most valuable work is being done at Chengtu among the government students by Mr. Stewart, who is in charge of the Bishop's hostel.

The most striking event of the year has been the united evangelistic campaign in the large student centres, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood Eddy. In Foochow over sixty weekly Bible classes have been started as a result, as well as a social service scheme and a sanitary campaign. All the students in the Foochow Medical School not baptized asked that their names should be entered as catechumens. Immense care had been taken in the preparations, and in every centre the largest halls were crowded by great gatherings of men and women students. In Fukien, under the leadership of Bishop Price, the campaign was carried on in the larger and smaller cities throughout the province by the most thorough and far-reaching evangelistic effort that has yet been made in China. All the Protestant Missions in Fukien, together with the Y.M.C.A., united in an effort to reach the thirteen large cities of the province through a mission extending over three months. In Chekiang the largest theatre in Hangchow was packed with 2500 students, a large overflow meeting also being held. The chair on one occasion was taken by the Commissioner for Foreign Affairs of the province, who made a public confession of his personal faith in Christ. Over a thousand students signed cards expressing their desire to join Bible circles, more than seventy of which have been started. Letter after letter from our missionaries testifies to the immense blessing which God has granted to this effort, and to the new and great possibilities which it has opened up.

The war

No part of our work in China has been definitely hindered by the war except that many pupils for a time left the schools in Hong Kong because of wild rumours. In several districts the government officials attended a special prayer meeting when there was danger of difficulty in China through Japanese forces marching across Chinese territory.

Japan: The war

In Japan the war has led many thoughtful Japanese to examine the principles which underlie the civilization of Europe. For some time past the student class in Japan has been greatly influenced by anti-Christian philosophy and criticism. The war is doing good in bringing out clearly the trend of teaching which attempts to set aside God and His Word. Ten thousand copies of the C.M.S. monthly evangelistic paper, "The Light of the World," are being regularly distributed in the Navy with the assistance of Miss Weston, and in one naval and military centre the Chaplain-General's prayer card, which has been given to all our soldiers, has been translated, and was welcomed by many of their Japanese comrades.

Three Years' Campaign

During the past year the Three Years' Campaign initiated as a result of Dr. Mott's visit, and shared in by the Protestant Churches and missionary societies, has been commenced in many of the smaller cities and in the country districts. A special evangelistic effort was also made at the end of the year in all the churches in Tokyo. One feature which continues to characterize the work in Japan is the readiness of officers, students, and officials to attend Bible classes. A typical instance is a class held in the home of a judge, which was attended by himself, his secretary, a schoolmaster, a dentist, and others.

Tokyo College

An important step towards the better training of the Japanese ministry was made when it was decided during the year that we should take part in the theological college at Tokyo, which was built through the Pan-Anglican Thankoffering gift to the Church of Japan, and Mr. Heaslett has been appointed a professor of the college.

Earthquake and famine

The terrible eruption of Sakurajima in January of last year involved a great break for some time in our work in southern Kiu-Shiu, but it also gave special opportunities for reaching the refugees, most of whom had never heard the Gospel. The government officials welcomed all efforts made by religious bodies to help them, and the energy shown by the Christian Churches in undertaking relief work made a very good impression on the people. Another great trial for the Japanese was the severe famine in the northern island of Hokkaido, and here, again, the relief work done by the missionaries afforded fresh opportunities of reaching the people, with the result that some fifty were brought to Christ and baptized.

The prospect

There is no sign at the present time of any mass movement towards Christianity in Japan, and in some parts there is much to discourage. But there is general agreement among Christian leaders that the opportunity afforded to the Church is greater than it ever has been. The recognition of political difficulties and grievous industrial conditions, and of the steady drift of many of the more educated men and women into materialism and atheism, has done much to create a humbler spirit. It is realized by the more thoughtful leaders that Japan's progress depends upon the character of the people, and that character is the product of religion. The inability of the old faiths to meet the exigencies of the changing conditions, and the failure of their ethical teaching, are making them more open to the influence of Christianity, and increasing the opportunities of those who teach the faith of Christ. Yet at such a time as this our staff of missionaries is weaker than it has been for many years past.

N.-W. Canada

According to a recent census there are 106.490 Indians, and 3447 Eskimo in the Dominion of Canada. Of these, 63,341 Indians are in the regions in which C.M.S. work has lain—6267 of these are returned as pagans. The census does not state the religion of many thousands, but 11,542 are enumerated as Anglican Christians, and 20,962 as Roman Catholic.

New Zealand

The labours of Samuel Marsden and other early missionaries were commemorated in the Dominion by a special series of services and gatherings in December last, and Christmas Day, the one-hundredth anniversary of the first public Christian service held in New Zealand, was marked by a celebration of the Holy Communion at the Marsden Cross, when the Bishop of Auckland and the Maori clergy of the diocese were present.

Medical Missions

Medical missions have recently been brought into particular prominence for various causes. It is fifty years since the first settled medical mission was commenced, when Dr. Elmslie opened a dispensary at Srinagar in Kashmir, on 9 May, 1865. It has therefore been determined to set apart that day for special remembrance of medical missions, and the year 1915–1916 will be devoted to a great effort to stir up interest in this form of missionary agency.

The war has affected medical missions in many ways. In Uganda the Mengo hospital is now used as a centre for the treatment of the wounded in East Africa, and a new ward for Indians has been opened there, while in Persia and on the Afghan Frontier the peaceful influence of the mission hospitals is generally recognized. The Pennell Memorial at Bannu has made good progress, an out-patient department having been recently opened, and the women's hospital is nearing completion owing to the generosity of Mrs. Pennell.

In Palestine and Turkish Arabia it has been necessary to close the hospitals, and all the members of the European staff have been obliged to leave the Turkish dominions.

From Peshawar, Dr. Arthur Lankester has been summoned by the Government to undertake a most important preliminary tour throughout India preparatory to a campaign against the increasingly grievous scourge of tubercular disease. The selection of a missionary for a task which involves, above all things, the winning of the confidence of all sections of Indian society is an eloquent testimony to the position which medical missions have attained in India. The annual eight weeks' hospital campaign by the Quetta hospital staff in North Sindh was an absolutely unique effort, which may have far-reaching results. The number of cataract operations alone during this short period exceeded one thousand, and there were over 1300 other operations as well. Moreover, hundreds of portions of the Gospel in Sindhi were bought and carried away by grateful patients to every corner of Sindh, so that the seed has been sown far and wide, and there is no saying where the harvest will appear.

In China as well as other parts the lack of recruits is keenly felt, especially for the work of medical training.

It is impossible to say how widespread are the evangelistic influences of our hospitals, but it is a constant grief to the doctors that they are so short-handed that it is quite impossible for them to avail themselves as they desire of the spiritual opportunities afforded.

Home

On February 1 the Archbishop of Canterbury presided over a gathering for the dedication of the new extension of the Society's House in Salisbury Square—new accommodation being required through the great development of the Society's operations at home as well as abroad since the last extension in 1885. The advantages of the increased accommodation are immense, but the office work is being carried on with reduced staff owing to the enlistment of seventeen members of the staff in the new Army. Important alterations are being made in the organization of work.

New head-quarters buildings

Candidates

During the year ending April 30, twenty-two men and twenty-five women were accepted for service, including two men and four women by the Colonial Associations. The value of the Home Preparation Union is being shown by the number of offers and inquiries received from those who have joined that organization.

Finance

The estimated expenditure for the year which has just closed amounted to £380,262, and the corresponding actual expenditure was £370,276, but in addition, out of the Auxiliary Contributions of the year and previous balances, a sum of £19,653 was paid out, so that there is a gross expenditure of £389,929, compared with £403,158 in 1913–14, and £390,125 in 1912–13.

Contributions to the Society's funds are arranged under three main headings: (1) General—which are at the free disposal of the Committee for any purpose; (2) Appropriated—which are allocated by the donors to meet current or future liabilities which the Society undertakes; and (3) Auxiliary—gifts to missionaries or to the Society itself to enable certain work to be done, for which the Society is not liable except to the extent of the funds received.

The total contributions received under the above three heads amounted to £358,156, to which must be added the surplus on last year's accounts of £2071 together with another small amount of £369; also balances of Appropriated Contributions (£20,684) and of Auxiliary Contributions (£13,994) to be brought forward, making a grand total of £395,274 of contributions of the year and balances from previous years.

From this total, Auxiliary gifts paid out (£19,653) or carried forward (£12,238), and Appropriated Contributions carried forward (£16,774) have to be deducted, leaving a total of (£395,274 less £48,665) £346,609 available to meet the above mentioned ordinary expenditure of £370,276, thus showing a deficit of £23,667.

The Committee wish to place on record their appreciation of the efforts made by most of the mission conferences to reduce their expenditure in the past difficult year.

The Committee would draw attention to the fact that while the contributions from the associations show a falling off of £27,256 as compared with those in 1913–14, they show an advance of £10,000 on the figures for 1912–13, and they ask for the prayerful co-operation of the Society's friends and supporters in any plans which may be laid before them for still further increasing the association contributions, which must form the main item in the Society's regular income.

Obituary

Among other losses the Society has to mourn the death of four veterans who rendered devoted and life-long service—Bishop Royston, one of the oldest Vice-Presidents, who throughout his long life maintained the closest connexion with the Society, and for nineteen years served as Bishop of Mauritius; the Rev. J. B. Whiting, a vigorous worker throughout a long life; the Rev. F. H. Baring, whose work in India and munificent gifts will long be remembered; and the Rev. F. Glanvill, an ardent and effective advocate of the Cause.

The Outlook

Looking over all the mission fields where the Society is at work it can be stated in the strongest terms that everywhere the opportunities for carrying on the great work entrusted to us were never so great and insistent.

At such a time as this wherein lies the Church's hope of meeting so vast a situation? Despite every effort in recent years she has largely failed to discover within herself resources which are in any degree adequate to her great task. But the war which has so vastly increased her difficulties has also brought her nearer to the time when in altogether new measure her material resources, and, most of all, the spiritual resources which she possesses in Christ may be released. The power she needs is the power of the Living Christ working in the lives of men. Only through utter weakness can men be made fit to receive that power, and as nothing else could do the war has broken down our self-sufficiency and shown us where our weakness lies. To the world the position may seem altogether overwhelming, but to the man of God the place of weakness is the place where God's power can be most fully manifested and His greatest works begin.

And if the war has made immense demands upon the giving powers of God's people, it has also shown them what whole-hearted co-operation in a great cause fully understood can call forth in the sacrifice of life and time and money. Through the war people are learning what they can do without, and what capacities for sacrifice they possess—the very lessons which are vital to the carrying out of God's great purposes in the world.

The Committee would make suggestions along two lines :—

1. They would remind themselves and their fellow-workers that the very greatness of the task is a call to courage and hope. The Christ Who is with us is He Who could say in the hour of His apparent failure, "I have overcome the world." The cry of the Church abroad, as well as at home, is for more prayer. And if our prayers are to be more prevailing, if our appeal is to be more compelling, if the Church in the difficult days that lie before her is to have the wisdom and grace that she will so need, it can only be by the receiving of new power. The power of God Himself is waiting to be released through the lives of men who refuse to be daunted by past failure, and who believe in One Who not only forgives, but Who uses the forgiven in the working out of His own purpose.

2. The Committee would earnestly appeal to their friends throughout the country to consider how by example and influence they can from the commencement of this new year increase the custom of regular and proportionate giving. It is not only with a view to the income of the one society that they venture to urge this suggestion, but also because it is an aid to a life of deepening devotion. It would ensure the permanent income which the steady carrying on of God's work so needs, and its adoption would surprise many who have not realized their power to give.

Within our reach, waiting by faith and prayer to be possessed, are the spiritual forces which can move the world, and entrusted to us are the material resources which can make the work possible. Dare we be discouraged or fail to meet this supreme opportunity? The same spirit of high adventure which animates the nation must fire the Church, making our very difficulties and failures a fresh call to truer service and to brave advance.

Home Operations

The work of the Church Missionary Society is carried on under the direction of a Committee consisting of the following members of the Church of England or the Church of Ireland: twenty-four laymen, elected at the annual meeting; all clergymen who are members of the Society and have been so for not less than one year; and all honorary governors for life and such other governors who have been so for not less than one year. At their first meeting in every year this Committee appoints five other committees. (1) The Committee of Patronage, which seeks to secure patronage and support for the C.M.S. and nominates for most of the honorary positions connected with the Society. (2) The Funds and Home Organization Committee, which is concerned with all the organization at home for the collection of funds and the circulation of information about the work of the C.M.S.; it appoints a number of sub-committees, one of which selects men for nomination as organizing secretaries, etc., and another deals with C.M.S. literature. (3) The Committee of Correspondence, to which is entrusted the administration of the foreign work, and the selection and training of missionaries. For these purposes it appoints a candidates committee and three group committees, one (Group I) to deal with C.M.S. Missions in the Far East and in North-West Canada; another (Group II) with those in India, Ceylon, and Persia; and the third (Group III) with those in Africa, Egypt, Palestine, and Turkish Arabia. (4) The Committee of Finance, whose office is to superintend the accounts and financial affairs of the Society. And (5) the Committee of Estimates, which prepares and submits to the General Committee estimates of the Society's probable expenditure. Besides these committees there are others which deal with medical, educational, and industrial work respectively.

The Society's work in the country is in the charge of associations for dioceses, archdeaconries, or smaller areas, which carry on their work with the co-operation and assistance of the organizing secretaries. Invaluable help is rendered by a large number of honorary workers in connexion not with these associations only, but also with branches of the Clergy Union, the Laymen's Union, the Gleaners' Union, the Ladies' Union, the Young People's Union, and the Home Preparation Union, and with study circles in all parts of the country.

The Hibernian Church Missionary Society has its own organization and officers. A few associations in Scotland are banded together to form the Scottish Auxiliary.

Contemplated advance

At the forefront of the resolutions passed at the memorable conference held at Swanwick in May, 1913, was one in which, "recognizing the clearness and urgency of the divine call to the Church of Christ to make strenuous advance in the evangelization of the world," the conference expressed its conviction "that God is now calling the Society to a strong move forward." A similar recognition of a "fresh call from God to go forward," was made at the Society's anniversary in May, 1914, at which the improved financial position, due, largely to the Swanwick Fund, was thankfully acknowledged. The Committee therefore proceeded to face the task of obtaining the missionaries and the funds upon which advance depended, and in July gave instructions that steps should be taken in the coming autumn to spread throughout the Society's constituency a knowledge of the plans for advance which had been prepared.[1] But the whole outlook, which had been full of promise, was changed by the breaking out of war between the United Kingdom and Germany three weeks later. When the Committee met in

[1] "C.M. Rev.," Aug., 1914, p. 462.

August they determined to postpone as far as possible all capital expenditure in the Missions, but otherwise to carry on the work as normally as might be. They also resolved to adhere to the plans already made for sending out in the autumn of 1914 all missionaries who might be able and willing to sail.[1] In October, when the question of the scale on which the estimates for the coming financial year should be drawn was under consideration, there was no longer any thought of advance, but, on the other hand, very little disposition was shown to refuse to welcome recruits, or to institute a backward movement, and it was decided unanimously to instruct the Estimates Committee to make the then current year's figure—£380,000—the limit of their budget for 1915–16.[2]

Postponed because of the war

The actual expenditure during the year under review fell short of the sum estimated and sanctioned by £10,000. It amounted to £370,276, including a sum of £7084 paid to the Working Capital Replacement Account, which account now stands at £61,538. The available income proved insufficient to meet the expenditure by £23,667. The following statement makes the position clear :—

Finance

Ordinary General Expenditure of the year	£363192
Working Capital Replacement Account	7084
Total General Expenditure		£370276[3]
The sums available to meet this have been :—
General Receipts	£257776
Appropriated Contributions (including certain balances of former years)	86393
Surplus General Receipts, 1913–14	2071
Appreciation in value of General Securities	369
Total Available Income		£346609
Excess of Expenditure over available Income ..		£23667

The total receipts of the year amounted to £369,539. Of this sum, however, £11,383 was given to special funds, and £100,380 were appropriated and auxiliary contributions, the latter of which are not at all, and the former only partly, applicable to meet the budgeted expenditure of the year.

Another matter, besides finances, which the Committee had to consider was what action should be taken with respect to the missionaries and recruits at home, especially doctors and nurses, who should feel it their duty to offer for national service, and they came to the conclusion that all such, as well as members of the staff at head-quarters, should be at liberty to act in accordance with their sense of duty in the matter.

New wing of the C.M. House

An important event in the history of the C.M.S. at home has been the completion, and opening by the Archbishop of Canterbury on 1 February, 1915, of a new wing of the Church Missionary House in Salisbury Square. For the first thirteen years after the Society was founded, the Committee held their meetings in the rectory of St. Anne's, Blackfriars; then for one year they used a hired room in Fleet Street; and on 13 December, 1813, they took possession of No. 14, Salisbury Square, a rented building which for seven years served as a training college, an assistant secretary's residence, and an office, and for well-nigh fifty years witnessed the periodical meetings of the Committee. In 1862 there was a migration, but only to an adjoining site, Nos. 15 and 16, Salisbury Square, which had been purchased, and on which a substantial beginning of the present C.M. House had been built. Then, in 1885, the first enlargement of the House was completed, No. 14 having been bought, pulled down, and replaced by a northerly extension of the C.M. Offices, the east end of the new Committee Room being exactly where the earlier Committees had gathered for half a century. Now, after another thirty years, a second extension, this time in a southerly direction towards the Thames, has been made. The greater part of the cost of the new building has been met from the proceeds of certain stock given by the late Sir George Livesey during his lifetime. The terms of the gift precluded the Committee from selling this stock in order to meet the current needs of the work or deficiencies of income, though they might use it for capital expenditure, such as the cost of extending the office premises. The stock has been valued at £19,500, and the sum spent in excess of that amount and of certain special donations has been derived from the Mission Building Loan Fund, created in 1914, the condition being that one tenth of the loan be paid back yearly for ten years.[1]

Reorganization at headquarters

While the office itself has thus undergone considerable alteration a change has also been made in the organization of the work carried on in it. According to the new scheme there are to be five full secretaries of the Society, namely, a clerical secretary, the official representative of the Society par excellence, who will be in touch with all the work at home and abroad; a foreign secretary in charge of the administrations of the Missions and of the candidates department; a home secretary; an editorial secretary; and a lay secretary, responsible for the receipt, acknowledgment, and actual disbursement of all moneys of the Society. Connected with some of the departments there will be a new class of officials, termed departmental secretaries. Three (possibly four) of these, one of them a woman, will be concerned with the administration of the Missions; two, one a woman, with candidates; and two, one called the home superintendent, and the other a woman, with home organization. Besides these there will be, as at present, a number of assistant secretaries, devoting themselves to various branches of the work; while the medical and educational work of the Society will continue to be cared for by special committees. The scheme will only come into full operation by degrees, and those foreign secretaries at present in office remain full secretaries of the Society. The following appointments, however, have been made: The Rev. C. R. Duppuy, M.A., deputy home secretary, as home superintendent, with the status of a departmental secretary; the Rev. D. C. Woodhouse, M.A., B.D., vicar of St. Ninian's, Douglas, as departmental secretary for candidates; Mrs. Douglas Thornton, secretary of the women's candidates committee, as departmental foreign secretary; and Miss V. H. Thorold as woman secretary, home. There have been several other changes in the staff at Salisbury Square. The Rev. R. Bulstrode assistant secretary for candidates, and the Rev. W. D. Stedman, who was in charge of the work among young people, have resigned to act temporarily as chaplains to the troops; and in place of the latter the Rev. A. P. Shepherd, M.A., curate of All Saints', Northampton, a brother of Dr. R. K. Shepherd of the East Africa Mission, has been appointed an assistant secretary. The Rev. L. B. Butcher, M.A., of the Western India Mission, has become assistant secretary for missionary study, in succession to the Rev. W. H. M. Walton, who has since been accepted as a missionary of the Society; and the Rev. J. A. F. Warren, M.A., of the United Provinces Mission, as an assistant secretary, has taken over for one year the work in public and other schools.

Appointments to the secretariat

In the new office arrangement the work relating to candidates has been definitely connected with the foreign department. The number of inquiries and offers of service during the year ending 30 April, 1915, was 407 (185 men and 222 women) as compared with 402 (216 men and 186 women) in 1913–14. Many cases went no farther than inquiry, but 142 (57 men and 85 women) were dealt with by the Committee; 40 candidates (4 men and 36 women) were accepted for training; and 47 (22 men and 25 women) were accepted for service, either after training or as qualified when they offered. The corresponding figures for 1913–14 were: cases dealt with by the Committee, 68 men and 87 women; accepted for training, 5 men and 29 women; accepted for service, 37 men and 32 women. Of the 48 accepted for service in 1914–15, 19 men and 10 women were already qualified when they offered, and 11 women were accepted after training; 2 men and 4 women were accepted by colonial associations; and 1 man and 1 woman were taken into local connexion by the

Candidates

Society's representatives in the mission field. Of the 22 men accepted, 15 were clergymen or men to be ordained before sailing, and 1 was a doctor. Among them were 16 graduates—2 from Oxford, 10 from Cambridge, 1 from Dublin, 2 from Durham, and 1 from Liverpool. Three of the women also were graduates, and 4 were nurses.

Islington College

The men accepted for training undergo the greater part of their preparation at the Society's college at Islington, where they spend three years reading for the Durham Licentiate of Theology diploma, as well as gaining practical experience in spiritual work; they afterwards have one year at Durham University, studying for the degree of B.A. The number of students in residence at the college during the whole or part of 1914–15 was sixteen, including three lay missionaries reading for holy orders. Four of the sixteen enlisted in the R.A.M.C. when the war began, but hope to return to the college when peace is restored. Nine men (including three of those who enlisted) were taking the full course; three of them were in their third year, and four in their second year. For the training of women the Society maintains its own hostel at Highbury, and it also avails itself of the facilities offered by The Willows. Twenty-five C.M.S. students were in residence at the Highbury Hostel in 1914–15, and 42 at The Willows or elsewhere. The Home Preparation Union, which was formed in 1897, to aid in preliminary study men and women hoping eventually to offer for foreign work, but not yet in a position to do so, has a membership of about 270.

Home Department

The organization of the Society's work at home, which aims at evoking prayer, gifts, and offers of service for the work abroad, rests with the Home Department. It is divided into a number of sections. (1) One is concerned with the supply of deputations, most of them missionaries on furlough, for sermons and meetings. At certain seasons in particular the strain on its resources is great, notably in March, May, and November each year; for example, in November, 1914, preachers or speakers had to be provided for 133 anniversaries and 80 meetings. This section also organizes the summer schools, which in 1914 were held at Lowestoft (600 members) and Greystones, Co. Wicklow (550 members). (2) A second section, under the care of an assistant secretary, conducts the affairs of the "Gleaners' Union for Prayer and Work," which was founded in 1886, and now has nearly 1400 branches in the United Kingdom, and a membership of about 80,000. Sixty-four new branches were formed in 1914, and 5507 members enrolled. The total number enrolled since the Union was established has exceeded 200,000. (3) Missionary study is the concern of another section of the Home Department under an assistant secretary.

Gleaners' Union

Study circles

More than 800 study circles are registered at head-quarters, and of those which furnished reports of their work in the session 1913–14, in 70 had definite steps been taken to increase missionary intercession; 31 had been able to increase membership of the various unions or improve local organization; 17 had taken up the support of native teachers; 82 reported efforts to extend the number of subscribers; in 131 circles members were engaging in some form of active service; 12 had enlisted new magazine subscribers; while 4 spoke of offers for foreign service; and in 11 circles members were facing the missionary call. The study books issued for use during the winter of 1914–15 have been "The Regeneration of New China," "The Uplift of China," "The New Life in China," and a pamphlet entitled "The War and the Kingdom of God." There is also a circulating library of some 7000 volumes, which is of great use to members of study circles and to others as well. (4) In January, 1915, the work among laymen was entrusted to Mr. T. H. Baxter, of the Missionary Leaves Association, whose duties in connexion with missionary exhibitions have been greatly lessened by the war. He has been successful in organizing conferences of laymen at a number of centres. (5) Women's work has been greatly developed of late years, and correspondents have been appointed to the number of 210 in various parts of the country. The quarterly conferences for the study of missions, held at the C.M. House and the Women's Missionary Salon in London, have grown in influence and membership. A women's residential conference was held in February, 1915. Connected with this section is the Girls' Movement, the object of which is to enlist in behalf of missionary work the sympathy and interest of girls of education and leisure. It has thirty-four girls' "groups" in various parts of the country, who unite in work, intercession, and study. The movement has adopted the Society's Egypt Mission as the special object of its interest, and during 1914–15 it contributed handiwork for hospitals and schools, and £216 towards the support of that Mission. Another section, or rather two sections, for the work has lately been divided, deals with young people. (6) One of these has to do with boys in public and preparatory schools. Among those visited during the year were Eton, Harrow, Repton, Rossall, Rugby, Shrewsbury, Sedbergh, etc. Contributions from the schools serve to provide part of the support of two "own missionaries." (7) Work among young people in general, and especially those attending Sunday schools, is entrusted to a separate assistant secretary. Training courses for Sunday-school teachers are held, and each year a series of lessons on some part of the mission field is issued in three grades, those for 1914–15 being on China. The keener children of all classes are enrolled in a Young People's Union, which has 1117 branches; among the 634 branches which sent in a report are 424 study bands with 6360 members, which in 1914–15 used "Talks on Changing China" as their textbook; a year ago there were 1154 Y.P.U. branches and 753 study bands, with 6116 members.

Medical Mission Auxiliary

(8) The Medical Mission Auxiliary, another section of the Home Department under an assistant secretary, spreads information concerning the medical missions of the Society, and raises funds for its support. Its receipts in 1914–15 amounted to £40,001, and when the necessary adjustments had been made a sum of £34,803 was available towards an expenditure of £37,247, leaving a deficit of £2,444. A special effort to increase interest in the medical work is to be made during the year 1915–16, in connexion with the jubilee of the C.M.S. medical missions.

Loan Department

(9) The last section to be noticed is the Loan Department, which lends lantern slides, curios, etc., for use at C.M.S. meetings and exhibitions. During the year under review, exhibitions were held at Ealing, Stepney, etc., but this branch of the work has been greatly interfered with by the war, which prevents large buildings from being available.

Though not sections of the Home Department mention must here be made of the Clergy Union, the Laymen's Union, and the Ladies' Unions, which aim at fostering missionary interest among the classes indicated by their titles.

Organizing secretaries

The Society's work in the country is in the charge of associations for dioceses, archdeaconries, or smaller areas. They have the co-operation of the organizing secretaries, twenty-nine in number, who are connected with the Home Department. The following among them have resigned: the Rev. A. J. Culwick, Liverpool district; the Rev. R. F. Drury, Durham and Newcastle district; the Rev. Rev. F. E. Lucey, Norwich district (returned to the Punjab Mission); and the Rev. C. T. Warren, Exeter district. To fill the vacancies thus caused, the following have been appointed: the Rev. F. Child, M.A., late of the Kwangsi and Hunan Mission, to Norwich and St. Edmundsbury; the Rev. F. M. Cundy, M.A., to Exeter; the Rev. J. E. Gardiner, M.A. (part time), to Chelmsford; the Rev. F. S. Golden, to Durham and Newcastle; and the Rev. A. T. Goodrich, M.A., to Liverpool.

One other vacancy in the staff of organizing secretaries has been caused by the capture by the Germans of the Rev. B. G. O'Rorke, Chaplain to the Forces, who in an honorary capacity fostered the interests of the Society in the Army. In his place the Committee have appointed the Rev. M. W. Churchward, honorary secretary and treasurer of the Army Missionary Association, who also is an honorary worker. He has a valuable aid in his efforts to arouse an interest in missionary work in a letter written by the late Lord Roberts, Lord Grenfell, and Lord Methuen, for private circulation among officers going on foreign service. It contains the following passages :—

Testimony to foreign missions by well-known Army officers

Some object to Christian missions in ignorance of their real value. We would suggest that you will use all opportunities of making yourself personally acquainted with the work they are doing, and the character of the converts. Most missions will bear looking into, and we are convinced that, if you will do this, you will never afterwards condemn or belittle them. Already the results of Christian missions in many places are very striking. For instance, in the Uganda Protectorate (Central Africa) there is now a prosperous and peaceful community of nearly 90,000 Christians, where not one existed thirty years ago, and where unutterable atrocities were of daily occurrence—while on the north-west frontier of India the pacific influence of missions among the fierce Pathan tribes has been of incalculable value to our Government.

Some of the noblest characters we have met have been missionaries, and the friendships we have made with them are among our cherished memories.

Editorial Department

The Editorial Department is responsible for the production of the C.M.S. literature, and the Publishing Department for its distribution; both are under the editorial secretary. The Society's six selling magazines have a monthly circulation of about 160,000. Special attention is being given to increasing the circulation of the Society's literature, and Mr. R. H. Everett, of the Missionary Leaves Association, has devoted much of his time to this work. Of the books published by the Society in 1914–15 may be mentioned "Plum Blossom," by Lily Sandford, a missionary play book; "Sun Children and Moon Children"; "The Professor Explains," by J. A. Staunton Batty; "Battling and Building amongst the Bhils"; and "Elder Brother."

New publications

Finance Department

The sphere of finance appertains to the lay secretary, who is also head of the staff at the C.M. House. In addition his department deals with arrangements for the passages of missionaries and for shipments of their stores and goods, the purchase and sale of property, and other legal matters, and with the organization of the Society's public meetings in London, and such exceptional functions as the opening of the new wing at Salisbury Square.

Children's Home

The title of "St. Michael's" has been adopted for the Church Missionaries' Children's Home at Limpsfield. Year by year the school is able to record successes gained at the universities and public schools by former pupils, and in 1914 its alumni won the Ellerton Prize at Oxford, and an Abbott and Bell scholarship at Cambridge.[1]

Centenary of Hibernian C.M.S.

The Hibernian C.M.S. celebrated its centenary in June, 1914. At the centenary thanksgiving meeting, which was held on Monday, June 22, it was stated that the thankoffering fund, so far as could be ascertained, amounted to £7857. The annual report gave a list of Irish (i.e. born in Ireland or of Irish parents) missionaries working in connexion with the C.M.S., which contained 137 names, seventy of them of men, thirty-nine of single women, and twenty-eight of wives.

Obituary of the year

The Society has suffered the loss by death of eleven Vice-Presidents, seven Honorary Life Governors, and two Honorary Life Members. The Vice-Presidents were the following: The Bishop in Jerusalem (Dr. Blyth), the Bishop of Stafford (Dr. Were), the Bishop of Tinnevelly (Dr. Williams), the Bishop of Quebec (Dr. Dunn), Bishop Moorhouse (formerly of Melbourne and Manchester), Bishop Royston (formerly of Mauritius), Bishop Tucker (formerly of Uganda), the Earl of Courtown, the Earl of Feversham, Sir Samuel Hoare, Bart., and the Rev. Dr. R. Bruce. The Honorary Life Governors called to their rest were the Rev. Dr. W. Allan, the Rev. F. H. Baring, the Rev. C. L. Burrows, Mr. W. Clarabut, Mr. W. H. Horsley, the Rev. Canon R. J. Lyon, and the Rev. J. B. Whiting. The Honorary Life Members who died were Miss C. Paton and Miss J. Sutton.

Mr. Baring and other retired missionaries who have died during the year, as well as missionaries and native clergymen on the active list who have passed away, are mentioned in the chapters on the Missions with which they were severally connected.

Patronage

The office of Vice-President of the Society has been accepted by the Bishop of Willesden (Dr. Perrin) and the Right Rev. R. MacInnes, Bishop in Jerusalem; and the Committee have appointed to the same office, S. H. Gladstone, Esq. (Bovingdon), General G. K. Scott-Moncrieff, C.B. (Shalford), and Sir P. Baker Wilbraham, Bt. (London, W.).

The following have been appointed Honorary Life Governors: The Rev. Prebendary J. Beresford (Wells), the Rev. Canon A. P. Cox (Cheltenham), Lieut.-Col. H. D. Buchanan-Dunlop (Reading), the Rev. Canon John B. Harford (Ripon), the Rev. Canon J. Rowlands (Aberdovey), the Rev. E. N. Sharpe (Marylebone), T. B. Sugden, Esq. (Wakefield), the Rev. P. E. Wilson (Wormley), the Rev. Prebendary F. S. Webster (London, W.), and the Rev. Canon W. Welchman (Bristol).

The Committee have also appointed the following as Honorary Life Members: Miss Louisa M. Garfit (Bournemouth), Miss M. C. Gollock (Wimbledon), Miss Glover (Leicester), Mrs. R. Maconachie (Bexley), Miss M. A. Milman (Devizes), and Miss A. Tristram (Durham).

The Colonial Associations

The Colonial C.M.S. Associations in Australasia were set on foot as a result of a visit from Dr. Eugene Stock and the Rev. R. W. Stewart, who were sent as a deputation by the Committee of the Society in 1892. The New South Wales C.M. Auxiliary, which had existed since 1825, was then reconstituted, and new associations were formed for Victoria (with which Tasmania and South and West Australia afterwards combined) and New Zealand. These associations accept, train, and send forth candidates for missionary work in C.M.S. and other fields, and are responsible for their support. They have sent to the C.M.S. field eighty-two missionaries (excluding wives of missionaries), namely, thirty-one from the New South Wales Association, thirty-eight from the Victoria Association, and thirteen from the New Zealand Association.

In Canada, Wycliffe College, Toronto, formed a missionary association in 1888, which maintained men in Japan and in North-West Canada. In 1895 this gave place to a Canadian Church Missionary Association, afterwards called the Canadian C.M.S., and the missionaries previously sent out by Wycliffe College were added to the Society's staff. The Canadian C.M.S. is financially now an integral part of the Missionary Society of the Canadian Church, which sends out and supports the missionaries. Since the formation of the Canadian Church Missionary Association twenty-two of its missionaries have joined the C.M.S. staff, but many of these are now working in India, China, and Japan, in spheres which are not, though some of them were, a part of C.M.S. Missions; and their work is administered by the M.S.C.C.

In 1895 several parishes in Cape Colony which supported the C.M.S. formed themselves into a South Africa Association, which is analogous rather to diocesan or archidiaconal associations in England than to the Australasian associations. The association is responsible for the personal allowances (in whole or in part) of a number of missionaries, in the same way as parishes or unions in the United Kingdom having 'own missionaries.' Candidates for missionary service are sent to England for training and acceptance.

The West Indian C.M.S. Council, which was constituted in 1897, selects West Indian agents for service in West Africa, and superintends their preparation at the Mico College in Jamaica. It is not responsible for their support.

I. NEW SOUTH WALES

THERE are twenty-five missionaries of the New South Wales Association connected with the Church Missionary Society, namely, the Rev. and Mrs. G. Burns, the Rev. and Mrs. E. W. Doulton, Miss E. E. Jackson, and Miss K. Miller (East Africa); the Rev. F. S. Rogers (Uganda); the Rev. E. C. Gore (Sudan); Miss B. I. Hassall (Palestine); the Rev. and Mrs. G. E. Brown (South India); the Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Ferrier (Ceylon); Miss E. M. G. Barber (South China); Miss R. A. Bachlor (Kwangsi and Hunan); Dr. and Mrs. H. D. Matthews, and Misses A. Kendall, N. O. Marshall, S. S. Newton, and A. J. Pownall (Fukien); Misses M. E. McIntosh and L. G. Montgomery (Chekiang); and Misses A. Jones and S. A. Plumb, who have not yet sailed. Of the above, the names of Mr. J. W. Ferrier (who was for some years in Ceylon on special agreement with the Parent Society), Mrs. Ferrier, and Misses Jones, McIntosh, and Montgomery appear on the list for the first time. The Rev. W. P. H. Hubbard has resigned, and the Rev. G. H. Cranswick has accepted a living in Australia.

Notwithstanding the war the year witnessed a great increase of interest in the work of the association, and of offers of service, and four candidates were in training at its close. The income, too, which amounted to £6750, showed advance. It exceeded the expenditure by £319, bringing the credit balance up to £965.

A summer school was held at Austinmer in January, 1915, under the presidency of the Bishop of Gippsland. Mr. F. C. Philip has joined the secretariat of the association to engage in country deputation work and in the development of missionary study in secondary schools.

II. VICTORIA, SOUTH AUSTRALIA, WEST AUSTRALIA, AND TASMANIA

THE following are the names of the missionaries, thirty-two in number, of the Victoria Association who are working in the mission field in connexion with the C.M.S.: The Rev. and Mrs. R. A. Maynard and Miss S. A. Dixon (East Africa); Miss I. S. McNamara (Uganda); the Rev. and Mrs. K. E. Hamilton (Sudan); Miss E. E. Martin (Turkish Arabia); the Rev. and Mrs. P. W. Stephenson and Miss H. M. Scott (Punjab); the Rev. and Mrs. T. Law (United Provinces); Miss M. M. Crossley (Central Provinces); the Rev. and Mrs. H. R. Holmes, Dr. Ethel Good, and Misses A. J. Nethercote and C. E. Nicholson (Bengal); Miss G. J. Kellaway (Travancore); Miss G. L. Bendelack (South China); the Rev. and Mrs. R. A. Pollard, and Misses E. M. Bond, E. Mort, K. L. Nicholson, and M. Searle (Fukien); Misses E. J. Clark, M. M. Clark, F. A. Furness, and I. M. Hughes (Chekiang); and Misses M. Armfield and V. C. Mannett (Western China). Two of these are nurses. In addition to the above there is one missionary, Miss D. M. Carr, whose acceptance has been recorded, but who has not yet sailed. No new missionaries were accepted in 1914. The association has one clergyman, two laymen, and three single women working in the Roper River Mission among the aborigines in the Northern Territory; one catechist engaged among the Chinese in Victoria; and seven missionaries on the staff of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society. There were about twenty candidates in training at the end of 1914, and more offers of service were received during the year than in any previous twelve months.

The receipts of the association in 1914 amounted to £8774, and the expenditure to £8506, but some of the gifts were to certain trust funds, and the net result was to increase by £41 the deficit with which the year opened.

Four new branches of the Gleaners' Union were formed, five were revived, and one lapsed; 260 new members in all were enrolled. There are 113 Sowers' Bands, with an aggregate membership of about 3000; and fifteen girls' missionary bands, with 150 members; while an encouraging revival was seen in the boys' bands. The Laymen's Missionary Movement was responsible for a good deal of deputation work, and the Women's Missionary Council, among its many activities, fostered missionary study in secondary schools. Three large missionary exhibitions were organized, and summer schools were held at Geelong, in Victoria, the Bishop of Wangaratta acting as chairman, and at Brighton, in South Australia.

III. NEW ZEALAND

In accordance with the new plan of reckoning as missionaries accepted candidates who have not yet sailed, the number of missionaries of the New Zealand Association on the staff of the C.M.S. is ten. Their names are the Rev. L. S. Kempthorne (Western Equatorial Africa); the Rev. and Mrs. F. C. Long (Punjab); Miss V. H. Latham (United Provinces); Dr. and Mrs. C. F. Strange (Chekiang); Miss M. L. Pasley (Central Japan); and the Rev. and Mrs. R. de Lambert and Miss G. L. F. Opie, accepted missionaries. The names of Mr. Kempthorne and the three missionaries who have not sailed are new to the list. Miss E. B. Giffard, who was on the staff of the association, has been placed in home connexion. The association supports ten native clergymen or evangelists in connexion with the C.M.S. in Africa, India, China, and Japan, and is responsible for the upkeep of a ward in the mission hospital at Kerman. Its activities are not limited to the C.M.S., for it has four single women working among the Maoris; two men, one ordained and one lay, in Melanesia; and three women on the staff of the C.E.Z.M.S. in India and China. Its receipts in 1914 amounted to £3039, a larger sum than ever before realized, and £267 more than in the previous year. A good proportion of the advance in income is due to the Sowers' Bands, which, though their number did not increase in 1914, contributed £150, more than half as much again as in 1913. There are forty-one branches of the Gleaners' Union, with a total membership of 1058. The Rev. W. S. Lucas, the honorary clerical secretary of the association, has resigned his position.

The Church in New Zealand had planned to celebrate the Centenary of Samuel Marsden's first visit by holding a series of meetings on the celebrated site, Oihi, in the Bay of Islands, where Marsden preached on Christmas Day, 1814, and where the Marsden Memorial Cross stands. There were also to have been special services in all churches throughout the Dominion, missionary exhibitions in Auckland and Wellington, and a Church Congress in Auckland. The war, however, compelled the abandonment of many of these plans. Services were held at Oihi on Christmas Day, attended by about 100 Maoris and 300 English. Bishop Averill, of Auckland, seven Maori and seven English clergymen, and the same number of Maori lay readers, were present. A grandson and a great-granddaughter of Samuel Marsden, who had gone out from England for the purpose, were among the visitors.

IV. CANADA

THE independent activities of the Canadian C.M.S. are now practically nominal, since it is financially a part of the Missionary Society of the Canadian Church, which sends out and supports the missionaries. Only three are now on the C.M.S. staff, namely, the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. T. B. R. Westgate (East Africa), and Miss C. V. B. Harris (Egypt). No new missionaries were accepted in 1914, but at its close four candidates were in training.

V. SOUTH AFRICA

THE missionaries supported in whole or in part by the South Africa Association, which does not train or accept candidates, but sends them to England for the purpose, are the following: Mr. T. E. Alvarez (Western Equatorial Africa); Mrs. S. A. Martin (East Africa); Dr. S. Eleanor Hill (Turkish Arabia); Miss S. Willis (United Provinces); the Rev. and Mrs. G. R. Ennis and Miss E. Wiles (South India); the Rev. and Mrs. W. E. H. Hipwell (South China); Dr. Mabel L. Hanington (Fukien); Dr. and Mrs. A. F. Cole (Chekiang); the Rev. E. A. Hamilton and Miss E. D. Mertens (Western China); and the Rev. and Mrs. W. P. Buncombe (Central Japan). The resignation of Miss A. L. Earp (Ceylon) has been accepted during the year.

VI. WEST INDIES

THE West Indian agents of the C.M.S., who have been trained under the West Indian C.M.S. Council at the Lady Mico College, Jamaica, are: Messrs. W. E. Blackett, W. A. Brown, R. A. Llewellyn, T. E. McKay, and J. B. Stewart, in the Niger Mission; and the Rev. W. A. Thompson, and Messrs. T. E. Douglas, L. A. Lennon, and H. H. Simpson, in the Northern Provinces of Nigeria. Mr. Lennon's name appears in the list for the first time. Two students are at present under training. The Right Rev. G. F. C. de Carteret, the assistant bishop of the diocese of Jamaica, has accepted the position of chairman of the council, Canon Wortley being vice-chairman.

The population of the world is estimated at 1,623,000,000. Of these, 495,000,000 are said to be Christians (240,000,000 Roman Catholics, 105,000,000 Greeks, and 150,000,000 Protestants); 10,000,000 Jews; 200,000,000 Mohammedans; and 918,000,000 heathen. About two-thirds of the people in the world do not profess or call themselves Christians, while it is probably true that something like one-half have never heard the Gospel, although the whole world, with the exception of Arabia and parts of Central Asia, is more or less open to missionary effort.

The Protestant missionaries connected with societies in Europe, America, Africa, Asia, and Australia are estimated as numbering 24,092. Of these 6769 are ordained men; 5069 are laymen; 6286 are wives of missionaries; and 5968 are single women. The number of ordained Protestant natives is given as 5941; of other native Christian helpers as 111,862; and of adherents of the Missions as 6,055,425.[1]

A world war

UNHAPPILY it is only too correct to speak of the war in a chapter bearing, as does this, the title of "The World." A conflict in which the majority of the great European Powers, and Japan as well, are engaged; which, by virtue of the filial and patriotic spirit of their inhabitants and their very connexion with the British Empire, involves the Dominions of Canada and New Zealand, the Commonwealth of Australia, the Union of South Africa, and England's great Eastern Dependency, India; and in which fighting takes place in Europe, Asia, Africa, and the Isles of the Pacific, and in all the waters of both hemispheres, cannot adequately be described as less than a world war. The "battle line" is indeed "far-flung." So colossal a contest of necessity affects the economic conditions of almost every nation, whether it be a combatant or a neutral, and by virtue of the dislocation of trade and of facilities for travel, financial stringency, snatching men from their ordinary avocations, and in countless other ways, is bound also to produce a profound upheaval. Missionary work has not escaped the general disturbance. The missionary boards of the United States, which have altogether about 2000 missionaries in the Far East alone, for whose work the quarterly payments aggregate about £50,000, have experienced serious difficulty in financing their missions, owing to the suspension of international banking facilities. German societies, with their 2166 missionaries, have been cut off from their base of supplies. Roman Catholic missionaries in the Belgian Congo, deprived of support from Belgium, have been forced to beg their bread from the natives. And the prospect of a falling off in income has obliged the C.M.S. Committee to order the suspension of all building operations not imperatively necessary in the field, and has led to some curtailment of the work in other respects. The personnel of missions has also been affected. The British Government has found it necessary to impose some, though but slight, restrictions upon the liberty of German missionaries in British territory; C.M.S. missionaries in German East Africa have suffered similarly, and it has been deemed desirable that those in Palestine and Turkish Arabia should withdraw. Miss E. A. Lawford, of Nazareth, alone remaining at her station. Still more sad has been the loss of the life of one valuable missionary through the sinking of the "Falaba" by a German submarine. These and other results of the war are dealt with in greater detail in the succeeding chapters of this Report which treat of the countries and Missions concerned.

Greater opportunity for mission work

There are, however, two points which call for notice here. The first is that in some respects the war has brought about an increase of opportunity for mission work. In India, for example, and in Japan, it has called forth a sympathy with our people which has produced a greater readiness to listen to what the missionaries have to say. The second point is that on the whole there is little reason to suppose that an impression adverse to Christianity has been made on non-Christian peoples by this struggle between nations professedly Christian. Bishop Montgomery, after making special inquiries, has said that non-Christian races approve the conduct of the Allies, and that they especially single out two facts which they commend—the keeping of promises and the defence of the weak. The annual letters of C.M.S. missionaries bear out this statement. The Rev. E. T. Butler, of Calcutta, says, "The tremendous bond of sympathy created through the war has given the evangelistic missionary a unique opportunity. I doubt if the Christian message was ever listened to with such attention as at the present time." The Rev. J. J. Johnson, who is acquainted as are but few with the Hindu religious orders throughout India, mentions that often after a long talk on important religious subjects with pundits at Benares, he was asked the question, "What is the news about the war? Is there any hope of peace yet?" and the speaker would add, "It cannot be but that God will crush the barbarous oppressors." And another missionary, the Rev. D. J. McKenzie of Amritsar, states that the majority of thoughtful Indians recognize at once that the real cause of the war lies in Christian nations being unfaithful to God's teaching. Again, Miss A. C. Bosanquet maintains that in Japan the war has been a help rather than a hindrance to the work. She says :— and Japan

People are awake, alert, sensitive to impressions, turning more to England and to English ideals. The general sense of insecurity makes some, at least, realize the inadequacy of materialism and intellectualism, and desire spiritual foundations. There is, naturally, some talk of the failure of Western civilization and religion, but I think it is pretty widely recognized (certainly it is preached by the Christians) that the one hope for Europe and the world lies in a more vital faith, in a return to the true principles and practice of Christianity. I myself have not found any special difficulties arising out of the war, but rather, on the contrary, new openings almost daily, and any amount of personal work to do. The conduct of the British troops and the line taken by the Government henceforth will be of tremendous importance. The East is watching keenly, and any moral failure on our part will do infinite harm.

But while such opinions are general they are not quite universal. A Japanese pastor says that the spectacle of so-called Christian nations engaged in mutual strife is a hindrance to educated men who have been taught that European civilization is based on Christianity ; and some workers in China have a similar experience. Bishop Molony writes :—

The war "a reproach on the name of Christian"

I fear we must say that the war has brought a reproach on the name of Christian. A Chinese gentleman, who was in his youth a Christian convert of the C.M.S. but has lapsed into indifference and misbelief, wrote in answer to a letter of exhortation which I wrote him lately that he believed in universal brotherhood and goodwill among men, and was disgusted to see the so-called Christian nations all praying to God for victory while they fought with one another. This was, I feel, rather employed as a convenient answer, but it is certain that the war is a real cause of stumbling to the heathen. The German campaign of misrepresentation adds much to the difficulty. "Copy" has been diligently sent to the Chinese press ; one very virulent pamphlet was shown me recently in which the whole policy of the British during recent years in connexion with opium, the Boer war, Egypt, Morocco, etc., was cleverly misrepresented, and we were vilified as curs, traitors, etc. I fear that the Chinese are prejudiced against our winning. . . . The war does not reflect credit on Christian nations, nor enhance the prestige of England up to the present.

Co-operation in the mission field

The existence of such widespread hostilities gives additional importance to the work of the World's Student Movement, which may be no inconsiderable factor in wiping out the bitter memories of the strife when peace comes at length,[1] while the various organizations for promoting co-operation in the mission field, though paralyzed for a time so far as the contending nations are concerned, may exercise an influence in the same direction.

Co-operation has already proceeded far,[2] and the C.M.S. has ever been ready to take part in its promotion. The chapters of this Report describe some of the measures which are taken, but it may be convenient to summarize them briefly here. The Society is represented on Continuation Committees in India, China, and Japan, and on the Representative Councils, from which in large measure the Continuation Committees are formed. It co-operates in language schools for missionaries at Cairo, Poona, and Lucknow, furnishing part of the teaching staffs, while its missionaries avail themselves of the advantages offered by the school at Calcutta. It is a partner in a union high school at Poona; it provides the buildings and has the major share in a union medical college at Foochow; it furnishes a member of the staff of the union theological school in that city, of a similar institution at Canton, and of a diocesan training school and a hostel in Western China; and it supplies one of the professors to the Anglican theological college at Ikebukuro in Japan. In 1914 the Society combined with other missions in organizing and following up Mr. Sherwood Eddy's campaign in China; it joins in the three years' campaign now in progress in Japan; and at a number of centres its representatives unite with those of other societies, missions, and boards in evangelistic preaching, tract distribution, and other efforts to make the name of Christ widely known. At home, as well as abroad, the C.M.S. diligently seeks to act in accordance with its thirty-first law, which says that "a friendly intercourse shall be maintained with other Protestant societies engaged in the same benevolent design of propagating the Gospel of Jesus Christ." Its officials attend the monthly meetings of London secretaries of missionary societies; and they take their part in the work of the Standing Committee of the Conference of British Missionary Societies, the Edinburgh Continuation Committee and its sub-committees, and the Central Board of Missions.

The British and Foreign Bible Society

A common platform on which all Christians can meet is afforded by the British and Foreign Bible Society, which since its foundation in 1804 has issued more than 260,000,000 books in eighty-three different European languages, besides those in other languages. In 1914 it issued 1,006,281 Bibles, 1,275,040 New Testaments, and 6,676,912 Scripture portions, nearly one-quarter of the output being in languages spoken in China. By reason of its translations of the Word of God, the publication of the versions, and the supply of copies to missionary societies at or even below cost price, and the work of its colporteurs and Bible women, the British and Foreign Bible Society ranks high among the missionary societies of the world.

AFRICA

Africa is equal in area to Europe and North America combined, and comprises nearly 12,000,000 square miles. Its population is estimated at 180,000,000; about 35,981,000 live in the British spheres, which cover an area of 2,233,478 square miles. There are said to be 843 languages and dialects spoken in Africa, 500 of which have never been reduced to writing.

One-sixth of the non-Christian population of the world live in Africa, the great pagan continent. In East Africa there are few idols, and the religions chiefly consist in the use of charms and rites to keep off evil spirits. Mohammedanism is dominant in North and North-Central Africa; and farther south, especially on the west coast, it is spreading rapidly.

In connexion with the various Protestant missionary societies at work in Africa, there are some 2450 men and 2040 women missionaries. The number of adherents of the Protestant Missions is estimated at about 2,000,000.

THE political history of Africa in 1914 was on the whole a record of retrogression owing to the war rather than of advance, such as has been chronicled of late years. So many of the European Powers have colonies and spheres of influence in Africa that, when Germany became involved in war with Belgium, France, and Great Britain, to mention only a few of her opponents, fighting was bound to occur in many parts of the continent. Happily, however, there is some economic progress to record. On New Year's Day, 1914, Lagos harbour was opened, thus rendering Lagos an open port, and large vessels like the "Abosso," of nearly 8000 tons burden, can now berth alongside the customs wharf. Railway construction in Nigeria, the most considerable and wealthy of British tropical dependencies, with the exception of India,[1] also proceeds apace; while within the last few months the railway from Kabalo, on the Congo, to Lake Tanganyika has been completed—the final link in the line of communication, partly by water and partly by rail, from the mouth of that river to the lake.

Economic development

As compared with recent years there is little reference in the annual letters of C.M.S. missionaries to the spread of Islam in Africa. One worker speaks of it as very much in evidence at Badagry in the Yoruba country, but it is no new thing there, for Mohammedans were already in the town when the Society entered it in 1845. In the Ekiti country, to the north-east, Islam was long unknown, but now it is gaining ground, and several new mosques have lately been built. In the protectorate of Sierra Leone, about one-quarter of the population is Mohammedan, and the census report speaks of Islam as making steady progress in both the colony and protectorate, adding, "The reasons for this progress are not hard to seek, namely, Mohammedanism recognizes polygamy, and is therefore congenial to the aboriginal natives' own marriage customs, and a convert to the religion is not thereby alienated from his tribal life." [1]

Christianity has brought many benefits to the Africans in addition to those which may be regarded as directly spiritual. The righteousness which on the whole characterizes the dealings of the British Government with the native races under its control is ultimately derived from the teaching of Christianity, and the work of missions is of real service to the political authorities because it aims at inculcating a mode of life in which "honour the King" is a corollary of "fear God." This has several times been recognized by those in high positions, and in February, 1915, Viscount Gladstone, presiding at the annual meeting of the Missionary Association for the dioceses of Bloemfontein and Kimberley and Kuruman, held at the Church House, Westminster, added his testimony to that of many others. He then said:—

Viscount Gladstone's testimony to missions

> Missionary effort had to bear a great deal of criticism in past times, but he would say this of missionary effort in South Africa—there was not a single responsible person connected with the Government, whether in the Union or any other part of South Africa, who would not bear witness to the fact that missionary effort was the greatest possible help to the civil Government.

The liquor traffic

There are some points in which the actions of the British Government with respect to native races is susceptible of improvement, and one of these concerns the liquor traffic. The Rev. F. C. Cleaver, an S.P.G. missionary, has lately given a few details as to the havoc wrought by the traffic on the Gold Coast. He quotes a native store keeper in an inland town as stating that in one month he sold £700 worth of rum, and says that at the funeral of this man's uncle £150 of the spirit was consumed in three days. The fines at the courts of the native chiefs are often assessed in drink, and in some villages at festival times not a single person is sober, even small children being drunk.[2] The hope has been entertained that the West African trade in spirits might receive a great check through the war, since almost all the trade gin has been shipped from Germany; but according to Bishop Tugwell the only differences effected have been that the spirits are now shipped at Rotterdam instead of Hamburg, and that whereas formerly they were carried in German vessels they are now conveyed in British ships. It has even been proposed that the manufacture of these spirits should be carried on in this country, in which case Great Britain's responsibility would be largely increased.

SIERRA LEONE MISSION

PAST HISTORY

Africa was the earliest field entered by the C.M.S. Its first two missionaries were sent in 1804 to the Susu tribes on the Rio Pongas. In 1816 the Society's efforts were concentrated upon the colony of Sierra Leone, which, after the abolition of the slave trade in 1807, had become the depôt for negroes rescued from slave ships by the British cruisers. Much blessing attended the labours of W. A. B. Johnson and other missionaries, but at a great cost of life, fifty-three missionaries and missionaries' wives dying between 1804 and 1824. The work was afterwards extended to the Bullom and Mendi countries, and, later, among the Temnes, Yalunkas, and Limbahs.

In 1861 the Sierra Leone Native Church was organized on an independent basis, and undertook the support of its own pastors, churches, and schools, aided by a small grant from the Society, which ceased in 1890. In 1876 the native Church took over the outlying missions in the Bullom and Mendi countries, and in 1908 it assumed responsibility for the remainder of the C.M.S. work in the hinterland, with the aid of some financial help from the Society. Four African clergymen connected with the Society's Missions on the West Coast (including the Yoruba Country and the Niger) have been raised to the episcopate.

The bishopric of Sierra Leone was founded in 1852. Dr. Walmsley, who was consecrated in 1910, is the present bishop.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The Society's work in the Mission, as distinct from that carried on by the native Church is now confined to Freetown, the capital of the colony and protectorate of Sierra Leone (see Map 2), where it has Fourah Bay College (affiliated to Durham University), a grammar school for boys, and the Annie Walsh Memorial School for girls, at which a normal class is held. The C.M.S. staff consists of 1 European and 7 African clergymen, 1 layman, 1 missionary's wife, and 3 single women, beside 19 African Christian lay agents. There are 29 clergymen and 136 lay agents connected with the Sierra Leone Native Church.

The Sierra Leone Native Church

THE pastoral and evangelistic work in the colony and protectorate of Sierra Leone is now in the hands of the Sierra Leone Native Church. Financially that Church made a good deal of progress during the year which ended at Easter, 1914, for, partly with the help of the interest on the endowment fund of £3000, raised at the time of the jubilee of the Church, it was able not only to defray all current expenses, but also to make good half the accumulated deficits of the previous three years. A noteworthy event of 1914 was the admission to the diaconate of Mr. J. R. Sabo, a Krooman, who is believed to be the first of his tribe to enter the Anglican ministry.

Work in the hinterland

Until 1908 work in the hinterland was carried on by the Church Missionary Society, but since that date the Sierra Leone Church has been responsible for it, the Society making a grant in aid which is reduced annually by £56. Unhappily this reduction in the grant has practically hitherto been met by a corresponding reduction in the work, with the result that it has cost the native Church very little. The reduction has not been deliberate. Workers have left and there has been a difficulty in finding others to take their places, and until there is a spiritual revival the young men of the Church are not likely to offer themselves for service in the regions beyond. The need for them is great, for the railway is opening up the hinterland; the impact of civilization on the inhabitants increases daily; their resources are multiplied; and new vices, and fresh opportunities for the indulgence of old ones, constantly appear.[1]

Fourah Bay College used for internment of Germans

Fourah Bay College, at Freetown, had a disturbed year. First, a part of the premises, lately used as the house of two of the tutors, but at one time the actual home of the college, and in which Samuel Crowther and others received their training, was taken by the Government for the purpose of constructing a new wharf. Then, in September, the college was transformed into an internment camp, and about 250 Germans were accommodated in the buildings or under canvas in the grounds. The work of the college, therefore, had to be carried on in a residential annexe to the Diocesan Technical School, which was kindly lent by Bishop Walmsley, and the students, who numbered about twenty, were compelled to take refuge in lodgings. The college involves little cost to the C.M.S. beyond certain scholarships, in return for which the Society receives some trained workers. The staff supplies the Bishop Crowther Memorial Church at Cline Town, where three young Temne converts were baptized in 1914; and the Henry Venn Memorial Church, or All Saints', which reports two adult baptisms. The Grammar School, after being without a principal for nearly two years and a half, received one in December in the person of the Rev. H. Dallimore. During the interregnum the school has advanced both numerically and financially, and in 1914 its missionary association raised nearly £30. A few years ago, in consequence of an unfounded rumour that its buildings were insanitary, the attendance at the Annie Walsh School fell off greatly, but it has since quite recovered; the boarding house is full, with fifty girls; and the day pupils number more than one hundred. The spiritual work among the children is always difficult, and is more so than usual when there has been a large influx of new girls. Untruthfulness and dishonesty are their most common faults, and they are very loath to confess to them even when no punishment is in prospect. But those who have been in the school for some years are said to be "immensely superior in life and character" to others. An "At Home" for former pupils was held in March, 1914, at which about 300 were present. Besides these institutions the C.M.S. has a primary school at Cline Town, and one for Mohammedans in the Kissy Road.

WESTERN EQUATORIAL AFRICA MISSIONS

PAST HISTORY

A large proportion of the freed slaves gathered at Sierra Leone at the beginning of the nineteenth century had been carried away from the Yoruba Country, which lies a thousand miles along the Guinea coast to the east. About the year 1840 many of them, having by that time become Christians and traders on their own account, returned to their fatherland. The result was an invitation to the missionaries to go thither, and the establishment of stations at Badagry, 1845, and Lagos, 1852, on the coast; and at Abeokuta, 1846, Ibadan, 1853, Oyo, 1858 (reoccupied 1887), Ode Ondo, 1876, and other towns and villages in the interior. More recently, Oshogbo, 1900, Owo, 1908, Offa, 1910, and Ado Ewi (in the Ekiti Country), 1911, have been occupied.

In 1841 a government naval expedition, accompanied by a C.M.S. missionary, the Rev. J. F. Schön, and by Samuel Crowther, a liberated negro slave, explored the River Niger. In 1854 a second expedition penetrated up the stream 500 miles, finding the natives everywhere ready to receive Christian teachers; and in 1857 Mr. Crowther accompanied a third expedition, undertaken for commercial purposes, and laid the foundation of the Niger Mission by establishing three stations. One of these was Onitsha. Other stations were subsequently occupied, namely, Bonny, 1866; Brass, 1868; Asaba, 1875; Idumuje Ugboko, 1902; Awka and Kaiyama, 1904; Ebu, 1906; Patani, 1907; Igbide, 1912.

The first station to be occupied in the Northern Provinces was Lokoja (1865), whence the work has spread to other places in the immediate neighbourhood. In 1890 a party of missionaries went out under the leadership of the Rev. J. A. Robinson and Mr. G. Wilmot Brooke, with the idea of residing at Lokoja and thence making an effort to reach the Mohammedans of the Hausa States. The climate shortly proved fatal to both the leaders, and drove the rest home. In 1900 Bishop Tugwell led a party to Kano, and though they were not permitted to stay in that town they did not leave the country. The Basa Country was occupied in 1897; Bida, 1903; Zaria, 1905; Kuta, 1906; and Katcha, 1909. In 1907, the Cambridge University Missionary Party (as C.M.S. missionaries) began work at Panyam, in the Bauchi highlands, and in 1910 at Kabwir.

Samuel Crowther was consecrated Bishop of the Niger Territories in 1864. He laboured zealously in the Mission till the end of 1891, when he died at Lagos. In June, 1893, the Rev. J. S. Hill succeeded Bishop Crowther, receiving the title of "Bishop in Western Equatorial Africa." Two experienced African clergymen, the Revs. C. Phillips and I. Oluwole, were consecrated as his assistant bishops at the same time. Bishop Hill died in January, 1894, and the Rev. H. Tugwell was consecrated the following March. In 1900 the Rev. James Johnson, a third African assistant bishop, was consecrated. Bishop Phillips died in 1906. Lagos was included in the diocese of Sierra Leone until 1898.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The Western Equatorial Africa Missions are carried on by 3 bishops, 23 English and 69 African clergymen, 12 laymen, 17 missionaries' wives, 25 other women missionaries, and 784 African Christian lay agents, in several clearly defined districts, namely, in the Yoruba Country and in the Lower Niger districts, which are in the southern provinces of the protectorate of Nigeria, and in the northern provinces.

I. In the Yoruba Country (see Map 3) the pastoral work is almost entirely entrusted to African clergymen. At the three oldest stations—Lagos on the coast and Abeokuta and Ibadan in the interior—district councils have been formed, and the clergy are appointed by local authorities and maintained independently of the C.M.S. These councils, moreover, are responsible to the diocesan synod for the evangelistic work in their districts, while the Lagos council has missionary work, largely self-supporting, in the Ijebu Country. At the other centres—Ilesha, Oshogbo, Oyo, Ado Ewi, Ode Ondo, and Owo—evangelistic work is largely in the hands of the Society, but provisional church councils are gradually preparing the way for self-support and self-government.

All the educational work, with the exception of a training class at Lagos, a grammar school at Abeokuta, grammar schools at Ibadan and Ijebu Ode, and some elementary schools, which are under the district councils, is administered and largely maintained by the C.M.S. The chief institutions are a training college for men at Oyo, a training institution for evangelists at Oshogbo, a boys' grammar school and a girls' seminary at Lagos, and a girls' training school at Ibadan; the grammar school is entirely self-supporting. In this connexion may be mentioned also the bookshop at Lagos, with its branches at Abeokuta, Ibadan, Ijebu Ode, Oshogbo, Ilesha, and Ebute Meta.

Besides Bishops Tugwell and Oluwole, the Society has 7 European and 16 African clergymen, 6 laymen, 7 missionaries' wives, 9 other women missionaries and 99 African Christian lay agents at work in the Yoruba Country. There are also 34 African clergymen and 380 African Christian lay agents in connexion with the Lagos, Abeokuta, and Ibadan district councils.

II. On the lower reaches of the Niger (see Map 3) the work is carried on by the Niger Delta Pastorate (which has its head-quarters at Bonny and is manned and financed by Africans), save at Kaiyama, Patani, and Igbide, where it is under the C.M.S. Higher up the river there are a number of stations and out-stations, the chief being Onitsha, Obusi, Nnewi, Awka, and Ebu, on the east of the Niger, and Asaba and Idumuje Ugboko, on the west. At these places the pastoral and evangelistic work is largely in the hands of provisional church councils, with which the European agents of the Society co-operate closely.

There are a theological institute at Bonny (under the Niger Delta Pastorate), a training college for men at Awka, a training school for girls at Umudioka, and young women's homes at Ani Ofu, Obusi, and Emii; a number of elementary schools are also carried on. Medical work is maintained at Iyi Enu.

The European clergymen in the Niger Mission number 9; lay missionaries 3 (1 of them a doctor); missionaries' wives 7 (1 a nurse); other women missionaries 12 (1 a nurse); and there are, besides Bishop Johnson, 17 African clergymen, of whom 10 work under the Niger Delta Pastorate. The African Christian lay agents, including those in connexion with the Delta pastorate, number 256.

III. The Mission in the Northern Provinces (see Map 4) is among the Hausa people, who are practically entirely Mohammedan, at Zaria; the Nupé and Gbari peoples, who are partly Mohammedan and partly pagan, at Lokoja, Bida, Katcha, and Kuta; and the Basa and Yoruba peoples, who are mainly pagan, at Lokoja and the other stations around the confluence of the Niger and the Binue. Work has also been commenced at Panyam and Kabwir, in the Bauchi highlands, among the Sura and Angass tribes, who are entirely pagan.

Training classes for evangelists are carried on at Katcha, Zaria, and Kabwir, and there is medical work at Zaria and Kabwir. The staff in the Northern Provinces is composed of 7 European and 2 African clergymen; 3 lay missionaries, of whom 2 are doctors; 2 missionaries' wives; 4 other women missionaries; and 49 African Christian lay agents.

Loyalty in Nigeria

THE outbreak of war led to a striking manifestation of loyalty to King George on the part of the people of Nigeria. Daily services to pray for the King and his armies and the empire were attended by crowded congregations at Lagos and in the Yoruba Country, the "peace bell," as it is called, being rung to summon them to intercession; the Moslems at Ibadan had special prayers in their own mosques; and at Oshogbo the head chief forbade the usual drumming during the ten days' Oshun festival, saying that it was not seemly to rejoice when "our fathers are suffering through the war." At Warri, a town lying among the creeks and swamps near the mouths of the Forcados and Benin Rivers, nearly 500 persons were present at an intercessory service when Bishop Tugwell was there on a visit, and a collection of more than £9 was made for the Prince of Wales's Fund. In the Northern Provinces the same spirit prevailed and the emirs placed £38,000 from the native treasury at the disposal of the Governor-General as a contribution to expenses and loss of revenue caused by the war. When hostilities first began the prices of English provisions in Lagos were doubled, but they were soon readjusted; local trade, however, especially that in palm kernels, was affected a good deal, and some distress caused.

Shortly after the capture of Duala, the capital of the German Cameroons, the Society was asked by the Government to receive some of the German prisoners for a time, while a party of twelve Basle missionaries requested their C.M.S. brethren to obtain permission for them to land and to provide accommodation for them. Eventually the missionary party was entertained at Lagos for a fortnight, while eight women and children were received at Ibadan. The kindness and consideration shown to the prisoners at Ibadan called forth from the natives the remark, "You English are too merciful." [1]

New government educational code

A new educational code has been issued by the Nigerian Government, which is welcome for its recognition of the necessity of religion in every true system of education. The following extract from one of the appendices shows the spirit of the code:—

> The examples of India and China, as well as of Africa, appear to demonstrate that purely secular education, and even moral instruction divorced from religious sanction, among races who have not the atmosphere which centuries of Christian ethical standards have produced in Europe, infallibly produce a class of young men and women who lack reverence alike for their parents, their social superiors, their employers, or the Government. . . . It remains more than doubtful how far the African is capable of being restrained by moral precepts divorced from the incentive of religious sanctions.

Provisions as to religious instruction

It is laid down that the religious instruction in government schools must of necessity be limited to the broad principles which are common to all Christian sects, such as the life and personality of Christ, and His teaching in the Sermon on the Mount, and the Lord's Prayer. If any government schoolmaster does not wish to undertake such instruction he is at liberty to refrain from doing so, and if there is no teacher available and no missionary to volunteer for the task the instruction will not be given. The Government makes no distinction of creed—none between Protestant and Roman Catholic, and none even between Mohammedan and Christian; but it recognizes that "religion is a force in the formation of character and of good citizens which cannot be neglected without disastrous results."

The Native Church

The third session of the third synod of the diocese of Western Equatorial Africa was held at Lagos on 19–22 May, 1914, and was attended by thirty-three clergymen and seventy-four laymen. Statistics presented to the synod showed that since the first session of the first synod in 1906 the clergymen of the diocese had increased from sixty-one to ninety; the number of churches from 101 to 358; the number of other buildings used for divine worship from 167 to 315; the number of adults baptized in a year from 1398 to 4544; the number of catechumens on the list in the respective years from 7964 to 21,327; the number of elementary schools from 8192 to 21,724; and the amount contributed during the respective years, from £11,859 to £23,342.[1] As explained in last year's Report,[2] there are four administrative bodies in the Mission, whose agents are appointed and supported independently of the C.M.S., namely, the Lagos, Abeokuta, and Ibadan District Councils, in the Yoruba Mission, and the Niger Delta Pastorate. In connexion with the Lagos District Council a convention on Keswick lines was held at Holy Trinity Church, Lagos, in July, 1914, and was largely attended; more than 1000 requests for prayer were handed in during the meetings, some of them containing definite confession of sin. A training class consisting of four young men was set on foot under the auspices of the council in the summer; the students attend a day school, and have special lectures in the mornings from different Lagos clergymen. The Lagos Church is responsible for all the work that is carried on in the name of the Anglican Church in the coast district between Lagos and Dahomey, and also that inland in the Ijebu Country. In the coast district there are several centres of Christian work, including Badagry, the first station in Nigeria to be occupied by the C.M.S. In the past there has been little fruit of the work among the Popos who are found in that neighbourhood, but there are indications that brighter days are at hand. Nine persons, the firstfruits of the work at Agboyi, at the mouth of the River Ogun, were baptized in November.[3] The work in the Ijebu Country has progressed rapidly, and the Christians in that region number 13,094, about four times as many as at Lagos. Almost every village has its own church, some large enough to hold the entire population, and many with corrugated iron roofs; and in a number of the towns the "collapse of heathenism" has been witnessed. At one place so few of the people remain heathen that when they wished to celebrate certain rites connected with their worship, they had to join with the heathen of the surrounding villages to get a sufficient number for the purpose. The work in the Ijebu Country is nearly self-supporting, but more agents are urgently needed and the Ijebu Church is about to undertake training work of its own. The Abeokuta District Council also has missionary work, sixty out-stations being connected with it. Two of the kings at Abeokuta attend church services more or less regularly. The converts organized under the Ibadan District Council gathered in good numbers at the special services conducted at the beginning of 1914 by the Rev. F. T. Snow, of Broadway, Worcestershire, and though no excitement prevailed there were evidences of conviction of sin and fresh desires for a holier life. Lantern services were conducted by Mrs. E. Fry in various parts of the town, and one for Mohammedans only in a chief's house was particularly encouraging.

Bishop Tugwell paid a visit in January, 1915, to Bonny (in the sphere of the Niger Delta Pastorate), and admitted three African clergymen to priests' orders, one of whom was from Sierra Leone, while the others belonged to the Niger Delta. The latter were the first natives from the Delta to be admitted to priests' orders. The services at Bonny are now conducted almost entirely in the Ibo language, instead of largely in English.

Three of the Society's missionaries were passengers on the British s.s. "Falaba," which sailed from Liverpool on 27 March, 1915, and was sunk by a German submarine in St. George's Channel on the following day. Two of them, Dr. J. C. Fox and Miss A. I. Wait, were among the survivors, but the Rev. A. Field, though his name appeared on the day after the disaster on the official list of those who were saved, unhappily proved to be missing. Mr. Field was trained at Islington College, and first sailed for West Africa in 1912. He was stationed at Lokoja.[1]

The Committee have accepted the resignation of Mr. A. E. Ball.

A committee at Lagos was engaged in the revision of the four Gospels in Yoruba and of the Yoruba dictionary, and Mr. C. W. Wakeman edited an English-Yoruba magazine, "In Leisure Hours," which has a monthly circulation of 2300 copies. In Ijaw the Rev. H. Proctor revised the translation of St. Mark's Gospel, and finished the preparation of an Ijaw reading book, with prayers and hymns attached. Mr. A. E. Ball completed the revision of the Prayer Book and of the Epistle to the Romans in Nupé, and made some progress in the revision of the Apocalypse. Dr. W. R. S. Miller revised the Hausa translation of Genesis, finished that of Exodus, and made a draft of Deuteronomy and Joshua in that language. He also translated several of the Psalms and some tracts, and with the aid of the Rev. W. A. Thompson, a West Indian, finished the preparation of an abridged Prayer Book, with twenty hymns and fifty Psalms. In the Bauchi Province the Rev. J. W. Lloyd and Dr. J. C. Fox were engaged in translating St. Mark's Gospel into Angass, while the former prepared a grammar and vocabulary of that language; and the Rev. and Mrs. E. Hayward revised and completed St. Mark's Gospel in Sura, and translated the baptismal service and several hymns.

I. YORUBA MISSION

Evangelistic work

Large ingatherings

A LARGE number of baptisms continue to be reported from the Yoruba Mission. In the Ekiti Country nearly 650 persons were admitted into the visible Church during the fourteen months ending November, 1914, although persecution had led many catechumens to revert to paganism. Forty persons were baptized at Owo on one Sunday, and seventy-three adults at a service a week or two later at an out-station in the Ora Country, near Benin.[1] In the Ile Ife district 136 adults were baptized during the year, in the Oshogbo district 103 persons, in the Aiyesan district sixty-five adults; and in the Ilesa district 144 persons confessed Christ in baptism on the same day. Some of these were Mohammedans, of whom a good many, besides large numbers of pagans, were under instruction at the close of 1914. Several new out-stations were opened during the year, and at Ogotun in the Ilesa district the church had to be enlarged to accommodate the growing congregation. Only at Ogbomoso and in the towns of Isehin and Oyo (where fear of their chiefs, of one another, and of the spirits which they worship, combined with a strong undercurrent of deadly fatalism, keep the people back) was there an absence of large ingatherings. Numerous though the baptisms have been, there would have been even more if the supply of workers had been less inadequate. In the Ekiti Country, where upwards of fifty places of Christian worship are found, there are only two ordained men, one a European and the other an African, with whom are associated three catechists, two schoolmasters, and fifteen evangelists. The appeals for teachers, it is said, "become more and more insistent."

Educational work

Training institutions

Strenuous efforts are made in the Mission to respond to these appeals. The buildings of the Training College at Oyo were enlarged by the addition of a block of students' rooms and a new dining hall, and another block of rooms for students was begun. Of the sixty-four men in residence, six finished their training and sat for the diocesan teachers' certificate examination, but one of them died shortly afterwards, leaving only five men available for the many openings and vacancies throughout the country.

[1] "Gaz.," Feb., 1915, p. 47.

More than sixty candidates presented themselves for the entrance examination, many of whom had walked long distances for the purpose, but only half of them were accepted, though more would have been admitted had there been room. Fourteen students at the Training Institution for Scripture Readers at Oshogbo were appointed to spheres of work in the Mission, and fifteen new men were admitted, the same number of candidates being rejected. Six of these, however, were admitted as members of a preparatory class which was set on foot. Preparatory classes were established also at Owo and Ado Ewi in which to test and teach likely young men before sending them up to Oshogbo; they are maintained by means of thankofferings made in the districts, and on Sundays they assist at churches which have no resident teacher. Two Scripture readers, former students at Oshogbo, passed the second class vernacular catechists' examination after a further course of reading at the training institution, and two second class catechists were successful in the first class vernacular catechists' examination.

Eagerness to be trained as school teachers

A normal class is held at the Girls' Seminary at Lagos. The school has more than 200 names on its roll, twenty-four of the girls being boarders. Lack of accommodation and an insufficient European staff prevented numbers from being higher. Many of the girls benefited by some special meetings conducted in January, 1914, as was shown by their changed conduct in the school. One of the pupils is a girl named Ejide, whose father, a Mohammedan, cast her off because she persisted in attending Christian services. She was then adopted by Miss E. A. Hobson and Miss F. M. Watkins, but soon afterwards her father found where she was, and tried to remove her. He was persuaded to abandon his purpose, but careful watch had to be kept lest he should attempt to poison her. The girl, who has shown herself an eager student, was baptized in November, and has since displayed much eagerness to win her Mohammedan girl friends. Some of the other boarders also are zealous for Christ, and one of them devoted the whole of her holidays in October to Christian work, visiting, in company with another girl, the villages near Abeokuta, and testifying to the uselessness of idolatry and the joys of God's service. Domestic training is given at the Ibadan Girls' Training School, where both little girls from Christian homes and also young women lately baptized are received. The capacities of the former are much greater than those of their elder companions; and it is hoped that a training class for the future wives of Christian workers and others, which has been started, will relieve the difficulties which are felt in consequence. That class had seven members; six of them prospective brides and the other the wife of a student in the training institution at Oshogbo. The girls gave a good deal of trouble out of school hours, and two of them had to be sent home; but the work had its bright side, and in October the student's wife received baptism.

Pastoral work

Praiseworthy "competition"

In many respects the lives of the converts adorn their profession. The Rev. R. S. Oyebode, of Ilesa, remarks that in his district "there is a spirit of strong competition for excellence in Christian graces," and speaks of the evangelistic spirit shown by the young Christian men. It is displayed in other parts of the Mission as well. A good deal of eagerness is shown to become teachers, and many give voluntary aid in spreading the Gospel. At one place a church was built as a result of the zeal of a youth who was baptized by the late Rev. T. Harding. The boy as a heathen came in contact with some Christians, and, desiring to learn to read like them, sought the help of an ex-teacher who occasionally visited the village. Through his instrumentality the lad was led to the truth. After his baptism he went back to the village determined to win other boys and youths for Christ; he drew a number of them around him, taught them to read, and with them secured a piece of ground in the middle of the village, and there built a little church. Again, the Christians in many places are liberal in their gifts. The native pastorate subscriptions in the Oshogbo district amounted in 1914 to £295 as compared with £262 in the previous year, although local trade was a good deal affected by the war; twenty of the twenty-five agents employed in the Ondo and Ilesa district are supported by the people; all the work in the Ikale and Mahin Countries, under the Rev. E. M. Lijadu, is self-supporting; and the Ekiti Christians contributed more than £25 to the Prince of Wales's National Relief Fund. Another cause for thankfulness is the steadfastness of many of the converts under persecution. Mr. C. W. F. Jebb writes of an influential Owo chief who was greatly incensed with his "boys" for attending church when he wanted them to do some work. He called them before him, ordered their books to be torn up, and told his household slaves to beat them until they promised not to go to church again. While they were being flogged he asked if they were willing not to attend services any more. They replied that though he might flog them every day, they could not promise to give up their faith, nor would they abstain from going to church. Sometimes the zeal of the Christians outran their discretion, and their imprudence brought persecution upon themselves needlessly,[1] but in most cases trouble could only have been escaped at the expense of faithfulness to God. For example, during a smallpox epidemic the chiefs of a town in the Oshogbo district, instead of trying to improve the sanitary condition of their towns, spent large sums of money on sacrifices to stay the epidemic. In some places the fetish priests persuaded the chiefs to demand the propitiation fees from all the townspeople, Christians and heathen alike, and when the Christians refused to contribute anything, the blame for the spread of the disease was laid on them, and persecution ensued. Some of the Christians are lacking in unity and the spirit of self-sacrifice, there were sad cases of teachers falling into sin, and, as so often happens where there are large movements towards Christianity, a good deal of merely nominal Christianity is found.

Bookshop

The work of the Lagos Bookshop, which now has branches at Abeokuta, Ibadan, Ijebu Ode, Oshogbo, Ebute Meta, and Ilesa (the last named opened in 1914), is on a large scale. During the year ending March, 1914, the following books were sold through the bookshop and its branches, besides many other publications, most of them in the vernacular: 5227 English and 11,512 Yoruba Bibles, 12,000 Yoruba Prayer Books, 13,945 hymn books, and 64,772 first reading books. The printing press produced a history of Lagos (in Yoruba), besides other works, and also prints a weekly newspaper, "The Nigerian Pioneer."

II. NIGER MISSION

THE work in the Niger Mission may be regarded as carried on in four distinct sections. In the Delta there is work (1) in the hands of the Niger Delta Pastorate, under the synod of the diocese, and (2) carried on by the C.M.S. among the Ijaw and Sobo tribes. Then (3) higher up the river the Ibos are reached at Onitsha, Awka, Ebu, and other stations; they are found also (4) on the west of the Niger at Idumuje Ugboko, Ani Ofu, etc., opposite to Onitsha. The first section has already been referred to in the account of the native Church [1]; in the remaining sections the conditions differ so widely that it will be well in treating of the evangelistic work to refer to them separately.

(1) East of the Niger

Onitsha, on the higher reach of the Niger, is the oldest station of the Mission, and is still its head-quarters, but many other stations have been occupied, some of them as far south-east as Ebu and Emii, both near Owerri. The demand for teachers which has been spoken of in several successive Reports is most pronounced in this region, and it shows few signs of abating. "Our work spreads rapidly," writes Mr. J. N. Cheetham, "and we cannot keep up with the demand for teachers." But it must not be supposed that in all, or even in most cases, the requests to be supplied with teachers are chiefly due to a desire to be instructed in the truths of Christianity. The Rev. S. R. Smith, the secretary of the Mission, writes:—

Motives for desiring teachers

> Heathen people are ready to subscribe the money necessary to support a school teacher. The conscious need for the Gospel, though it is shown occasionally, is most frequently obscured by the demand for education. Our difficulty lies in laying the right and necessary emphasis on the spiritual side of the work. Our religious instruction is tolerated and accepted because it is compulsory and is a means of the acquiring of English, the language of trade, the law courts, and government administration. Unless increasing efforts are made we are in danger of reproducing the spurious civilization of coast towns. Again, the claims of institutional work, the organization connected necessarily with the establishment of provisional councils, and the increasing obligations of work connected with examinations, tend to throw evangelistic work into the background by using up the time and energy of our very small staff of European workers.

In this part of the country the churches are filled with large congregations. At Nnewi about 2000 persons assembled twice daily for three days when Mr. Snow visited the town to conduct some special services; at Obusi the average attendance at the Sunday services is about 800; while in the Ebu district, where eleven new out-stations, bringing the total number up to thirty-two, were opened between January and September, 1914, the aggregate attendance on a Sunday morning is sometimes as high as 10,000. The scantiness of the rainfall which caused the Niger for some months to be almost unnavigable by steamers, and, later in the year, the outbreak of war, occasioned a temporary check to the work of the bookshop at Onitsha, and the station classes at Iyi Enu had fewer members considerably than in 1913, but itinerations by the missionaries and by bands of teachers and pupil teachers during the school holidays were instrumental in reaching many non-Christians with the Gospel. At Udi, twenty-eight miles east of Awka, the centre of the recently discovered coal field, to which a railway is under construction, one of the chiefs and also the chiefs of three villages in the neighbourhood asked the Rev. C. Brown to establish work in their midst. A boy from Awka, who had been attending services at that town, though not baptized, had been teaching the people of Udi, and the inhabitants of the four villages determined to build one central school and a teacher's house. Unfortunately a rebellion broke out at a place a few miles beyond Udi shortly after Mr. Brown's visit to that village, in the course of which the friendly chief and some of his boys were killed, and in consequence the Government has not felt able to grant permission to occupy the place.

Visit to a new coal field

(2) West of the Niger

The work on the western side of the Niger opposite to and to the north-west of Onitsha, though among Ibos, is in a different stage. It was begun forty years ago, though most of the stations date from the present century, but a certain amount of apathy characterizes the people, and there is no demand for education such as exists on the eastern side. It is a happy sign that a growing discontent has arisen among the converts because of the slow progress which is being made. A meeting of all the agents in the district was called in September, at which a resolution was passed requesting that more of their own people might be appointed to work in their towns. One Christian in every twenty in the district becomes a teacher, but many are assigned to schools on the eastern side because money for their support has been provided by heathen towns in that part. A new out-station was opened at Akuku Akumazi, and the outlook was more hopeful at Ogwashi, now the government head-quarters in the Asaba district, where so much unrest prevailed in 1909 that a punitive expedition had to be sent, in the course of which the mission house was destroyed.[1] The headmen expressed their willingness that the work should be reopened if a white man were appointed to the station. Twenty youths, aged between 18 and 25, were under instruction for baptism at Asaba.

(3) In the Niger Delta. (a) The Ijaw Country

The last section comprises the work in the Ijaw Country, where two stations, Patani and Kaiyama, are occupied by Europeans, and the Sobo Country. In the Ijaw Country about 1000 persons attend the services on Sundays, and 1300 copies of the reading book in the vernacular were sold in eight months, while English primers also met with a ready sale. On market days at Patani large crowds of people from the villages gathered in the town, and the mission house was often besieged by would-be purchasers of books, many of whom invited the missionaries to visit their villages. The work at Kaiyama was stationary, and both there and at Patani the schools made little progress; but ten persons were baptized at Obunagha, and there was a great demand for teaching in the district, in visiting which a launch provided for the Rev. H. Proctor by friends in England was of great service. At a place called Odi, the school building is crowded to the doors at the Sunday services, and several families have thrown away their idols; and so eager were the people of another town for instruction that they sent twenty men to carry Mr. Proctor's loads through the forest. At a third place, the name of which is not given, whence in former years the teacher had twice been driven away, the inhabitants, to the number of forty or fifty, were actually found, when visited unexpectedly, to be engaged in building a prayer house, and they expressed a desire to have a teacher of their own, even offering to support him. The prevalent anxiety for teaching leads to some dangers. When the Mission cannot supply teachers the people are apt to engage lads of doubtful character, paying them for their services. These lads undertake the work merely for the sake of what they get; they have had no training and are under no supervision; and three have lately been imprisoned for aiding and abetting the people in opposition to the Government. Efforts are made to increase the efficiency of such young teachers as there are by sending them to work at a place for a week and then calling them to Kaiyama for training, but the plan unsettles the men, and they are inclined to look upon the time of their residence at Kaiyama as a sort of holiday.[1]

(b) The Sobo Country

The Sobo Country lies to the north-west of Patani, and consists of two parts; the smaller, in the south-east corner, is the Soko, sometimes called the Igabo, Country,[2] and the larger, containing twice as many people, is the Sobo Country proper. The Sobos appear to be closely connected with the Yorubas, many of their customs being the same, while a number of the people are fluent in Jekri, a language acknowledged to be akin to Yoruba. Several dialects of the Sobo language are in use, the most common being that spoken in the Agbadu district, which lies north-east of Warri. In 1913 and 1914 the Rev. J. D. Aitken travelled about this region, making Igbide, about six miles north-west of Patani, his headquarters, and working chiefly among the Sokos; and during the year under review the Rev. C. F. Cole was transferred from Sierra Leone to take charge of the congregations at Warri and Sapele. Bishop Tugwell paid a visit to the district in December, 1914, and found some fifteen congregations connected with that at Warri, and the same number with that at Sapele. These have been formed mainly through the instrumentality of African agents working under the supervision of Bishop Johnson, but in few cases is there any accredited teacher, and many of the Christians are sadly ignorant, while the majority of the men are polygamists. They are, however, most desirous of being taught; many of the towns have prayer houses; and at one place 400 people assembled for a service when the Rev. G. E. Reeks was there. Some of the converts have suffered persecution on account of their abandoning old pagan customs, and altogether the outlook is most promising. The Christians are quite ready to support their teachers, but help is needed in the form of supplying Bible translations, training agents, and superintending those at work.[3]

Training institutions

The students in the Training College at Awka numbered twenty; eight of them were preparing for work as evangelists, and the remainder as schoolmasters. There is a normal class also at the Girls' Training School at Umudioka; nine of its members sat for the pupil teachers' examination in the autumn, and six passed. The primary object of the school is to give domestic instruction to Christian girls, but a few non-Christians are admitted, and eight of them received baptism in 1914. The girls support a worker at a place called Abagana which they visit from time to time, and they are taken on itinerations to other towns as well, in the course of which they engage in work among women and girls. There are three Young Women's Homes in the Mission, in which domestic training is given to girls who are Christians or desire to embrace Christianity, but cannot remain in their own homes lest they should be married to heathen men, or be forced into a life of sin. All the homes were full, about twenty girls being in the one at Obusi; fifty (besides five married women who entered for a short course of teaching before baptism) in that at Emii; and thirty at Ani Ofu. Those at Ani Ofu belonged to thirteen different towns, and their ages varied from 16 to 25; twenty-two of them were refuge cases. Six of the girls at Ani Ofu were baptized during the year, as were thirteen of those at Emii. In the primary schools the boys largely outnumber the girls,[1] for Christian fathers are not ready to pay for the education of their daughters, and the young Christian men do not look for much companionship or sympathy in their work from their partners in life. The pupil teachers number more than one hundred, about twice as many as in 1913, but, save at the Umudioka school, only two of them are girls.

Object of Young Women's Homes

Boys largely out-number girls in schools

One serious consequence has ensued, and is likely to ensue, from the marked disparity between the number of boys and girls in the mission schools. The schools are the great "feeders" of the baptismal classes, and the men among the Christians now largely outnumber the women, the proportion in the Ibo Country being nine to one. One result is that most of the young Christian men become engaged to heathen girls; these are sent to be trained at Umudioka or at one of the homes for young women, and many of them receive baptism, but there must be even more than the usual element of doubt as to the genuineness of the profession of Christianity when such motives for it are introduced. Marriage difficulties arise in other forms. Christian youths find that on account of their religion their heathen relatives will not help them to pay the dowry required for a wife; and again, some take their wives native fashion, that is, without any Christian or legal ceremony. For these and similar reasons Mr. Smith affirms that "unless more is done to evangelize the women the result must be disastrous to the spiritual development of the work." The difficulty is great, for the women are more ignorant and harder to teach than the men, and agents in charge of out-stations are apt to take the line of least resistance, and devote themselves to those who respond most readily to their efforts. Some of the converts themselves appear to recognize the special need for work among women, since at Nnewi they are making a considerable gift to the Society by building houses to be used for that purpose. Some itinerations were made by Miss R. Chollet, who held Bible classes for the Christian women at the different places to which she went, and took them with her when she visited the non-Christians in their homes. Another effort among women was made at Onitsha by starting a branch of the Y.W.C.A. Some of the Christians were called on to endure persecution. At Igbodo, in the Idumuje Ugboko district, first the mission agent and then the converts were turned out of the town, and a few weeks later the mission premises were burned to the ground. With strange irony the Christians were accused of incendiarism, an obvious absurdity seeing that they themselves had erected the buildings; the charge was dismissed for lack of evidence, but others were brought of so general a nature that it was impossible to disprove them, and fines amounting in the aggregate to between £40 and £50 were inflicted. At another place, Ndi Izuogu, in the Onitsha district, the leading convert, having remonstrated with a chief's boys who were engaged in raiding, was accused of having interfered with court messengers when discharging their duty, and was sentenced to three months' imprisonment. On the first three Sundays that he was in prison pressure was brought to bear on him to work as on other days, but he steadfastly refused, and bravely endured a merciless flogging, declaring that he would die sooner than desecrate the Lord's Day.

In the absence of Dr. A. E. Druitt in England, the medical work at Iyi Enu was closed, but Miss M. E. Elms carried on dispensary work among women and children at Onitsha Olona as a temporary centre. Two small mud houses were made to serve as wards, in which eighteen patients were received in the last six months of 1914, while 3000 visits of out-patients were recorded in the same period.

III. NORTHERN PROVINCES MISSION

Kabba and Basa Provinces

THE first centre in what are now the Northern Provinces of Nigeria to receive a Christian teacher was Gbebe in the Basa Country, near the confluence of the Niger and the Benue, but for some years past that place has only been worked as an out-station from Lokoja, which is on the opposite, the western, side of the river, where a missionary was stationed in 1865, just fifty years ago. The occupation of all the other stations in the Mission dates from within the present century. At Lokoja, the work is in a much more advanced state than elsewhere in the Northern Provinces, and there is a native pastorate association, which in 1914 raised £250, the largest income it has ever had, and which not only pays the salary of the pastor and meets all local expenses, but also maintains eight evangelists at out-stations in the district. Special services conducted in the town were instrumental in the reclamation of several backsliders; and an excellent account is given of the agents, who though often simple-minded and even ignorant men, and confronted with difficult problems, yet conducted themselves in such a way that no complaint was lodged against them, even by the sometimes suspicious government officials. Twenty-four adults were baptized, three of them being natives of the Gold Coast, and the remainder belonging to the Kabba or Basa Provinces.[1] In recent years a great change has taken place in the Mission. A short time ago it was difficult to find places where Mohammedan influence was not too strong to allow of occupying them with any chance of success; but now the difficulty is to find the men and the means to take advantage of the many openings which present themselves. At an out-station named Ogidi many of the young men have renounced idolatry, and in 1914 the annual idol sacrifices and festival were so sparsely attended in consequence that the elders of the village expelled the teacher and the leading converts. Again, when the teacher assigned to Otunade, a new out-station, arrived, he found that the people of their own accord had built a large church, and that twenty-three persons, most of them young men, were able to read the Yoruba Bible as the result of teaching received during the visits of an agent from a neighbouring centre. Within ten days previous to writing his annual letter Mr. T. E. Alvarez received urgent requests for teachers from three large villages within thirty miles of Lokoja.

Many openings where few existed

The work in the Kabba and Basa Provinces which has been described is carried on among a mixed population, partly Mohammedan and partly pagan; in the province of Nupé Moslems predominate at Bida and Katcha and some other large towns, but the majority of the people in the numerous small villages are pagans. Among these latter a rapidly spreading movement is in progress. To a large extent, perhaps, it is caused by a desire for knowledge, but there is a distinctly religious side to it, as evidenced by the crowded Sunday services in the primitive churches erected by the people, and in the heartiness with which old and young join in the prayers and hymns. Severa lof the larger villages around Bida—Kuci (pronounced Kuchi), Doko, Pici (pronounced Pichi), and Gaba, among them—have now been occupied by resident teachers, and a number of young men from these places are receiving a short course of training to fit them to act as leaders. The people build their own schools and buy all the books they can; a few men in each village are able to read fluently; and many have given their charms, bought from Mohammedans, to be burned, and have ceased to take any part in the animistic rites in which many of their elders still indulge. Opposition has been met with at the hands of a Moslem prince of Bida both at Doko and Gaba, but at the latter place the people showed so clearly that they intended to follow their own desires in regard to Christian teaching that they were left severely alone. Strangely enough at Kuta, in the Zaria Province, where the natives, the Gbaris, are less Islamized, the outlook is not nearly as hopeful as in the district around Bida. Both at Kuta and at Egwa, one of its out-stations, a friendly spirit is shown, but there seems to be no real desire to learn; at Guni, however, a second out-station, the people have built houses for the agents, attendance at school and church is good, and there is reason to anticipate some definite result in the form of converts in the near future.

Zaria Province

North-east of Kuta is Zaria, a town which gives its name to the province, where the population is entirely Moslem. There were some signs of declension among a few of the Christians, which are hardly surprising in view of the nature of their environment. Dr. W. R. S. Miller writes:—

A difficult environment

> Few workers at home, even those working in the comparatively difficult and apathetic country parishes of England, can understand the withering effect of this steady, dogged Moslem opposition, the almost soul-destroying effect of living among those whom you earnestly long to win, but whose very natures seem warped and frozen and almost impervious to any holy influence. To young Christians, fresh from their baptism and with a desire to work for Christ and lead others to Him, the disappointment leads to coldness, and it is only when one finds a strong, Spirit-filled young Christian that one would willingly put much work among Moslems in his hands; far better let him go to pagans, where he will be constantly in touch with work which soon yields fruit, and the manifestation of God's power is always before his eyes in the regeneration of lives.

And again, referring to the members of the small class of inquirers, he says:—

> The terrible effect of Moslem upbringing, the dwarfing of all spiritual intelligence by a system of legality, the obliterating of all sense of truth and heart purity, make progress even among genuine seekers a very slow thing, and one often sees here that the power of God, which seems at once to deliver a man truly converted from swearing and foul language, from dishonesty and other sins, seems to leave his tendencies to lying and lust barely touched.

But, happily, this is only one side of the picture, for Lami, a sister of Mallam Fate, one of the first converts at Zaria,[1] and three of the elder Christian girls exerted themselves to teach the women at Gimi, where the Zaria Christians support an agent; two other converts from Zaria were under training at Oyo; and others again were receiving some training at the station from Dr. Miller. Five adults were baptized, and on the same day Audu, the first Hausa convert, and Hawa'u, or Eve, whose story has several times been referred to in the C.M.S. Reports,[2] were married in church, the first to be thus united.[3] Miss E. M. Paddon held a weekly meeting for women and girls, and visited the people in their compounds, receiving a warm welcome even in those of strict Moslems; and the medical work was on a rather larger scale than in 1913. Besides the inquirers in the class at Zaria there are a number at Gimi, a new village established in the bush with government permission by people who wished to receive Christian teaching. Dr. Miller writes as follows :— A Christian village established

Although Gimi is only a very small place, it is nevertheless a marvellous sight; it is almost unique, I think, to see a Christian community in the heart of a huge Moslem land. In a land reeking in physical and moral filth, where the very atmosphere seems poisoned by the horrible language and the merest babes are adepts in Billingsgate and morality has no chance, it makes one thank God, amid all else that is imperfect, to find 115 souls all under Christian teaching; women at their grinding singing hymns of praise all day long; children and grown ups, men and women all swarming to daily school; a church into which every individual in the community comes every Sunday, with Prayer Book and Bible and hymns in Hausa; farming going on everywhere vigorously; a splendid communal spirit; the women happy and respected and not kept in seclusion; the children able to grow up in an atmosphere of purity, taught from earliest infancy to avoid blasphemy and foul talk; a village in which everything sanitary has been achieved with no opposition from the people, but with their hearty co-operation, and in which the children can be and have been vaccinated with the full understanding and consent of their parents.

Bauchi Province

The reports from the Bauchi Province, where the work is entirely among pagans, are no less hopeful than those from other sections of the Mission. The firstfruits among the Suras, who number about 30,000, were gathered in at Panyam by the baptism of a couple of men; and at Kabwir, the other station in the province, where the missionaries had a similar happy experience in 1913, twelve more Angass converts, six youths and six girls, were admitted into the visible Church, and the first Christian marriages were celebrated.[1] A beginning was made at Kabwir with the preparation of four young Angass men for work as evangelists; and at Panyam the Christians faithfully bore their witness for Christ, one of the two men baptized was admitted as a probationer evangelist, and prayer meetings held on Saturday nights had an average attendance of fifty. One of the leading adherents at that station is Dakwa, a man who once was chief, but was deposed because of his adoption of the Christian faith, albeit he was generally acknowledged to be the strongest and most just ruler that the country had known; years before the station was opened he was a polygamist, and as he has not yet given up his plurality of wives he is debarred from baptism. At each station there are between fifteen and twenty persons in the catechumenate, and at Panyam the arrival of Miss M. Compton-Burnett gave such an impetus to the work among women and girls that a special baptism class was set on foot for them. A number of them attended the services, and many who did so declared that they would not marry the young men to whom they had been betrothed from infancy unless these gave up their heathen practices and attended Christian worship. Several itinerations were made from Kabwir, and the Rev. J. W. Lloyd spent three months at Amper, a town twelve miles to the east, from which a deputation had been sent to ask for a resident teacher. Both in the town and the villages around he received a hearty welcome, but eventually the Resident at Naraguta ordered him to return to Kabwir and await the decision of the Government as to whether it was "politically advisable" for a mission station to be established in the town—this in a pagan country which the missionaries were invited to enter, and where they had a free hand given them to settle anywhere! The action of the Government in this case was not exceptional. In November, 1913, the missionaries applied for a site at Garam, a large town south of Kabwir, where two chiefs had expressed their willingness to welcome a teacher. Months elapsed before any reply was received, and in that period the Government appointed a headman, who, fearing that the presence of missionaries would prevent his exploiting the people as he had hoped, told the old men that if the Christians came every one would have to give up their old worship, and so led them to report to the Resident that they did not want the missionaries. Thus it came to pass that ten months after the application for a site was made it was refused on the ground that "the people have not displayed to the political department a readiness to receive the establishment of a mission station among them yet." Permission was next sought to settle at Kereng or Kombun, two other towns, where friendly relations with the people had always prevailed, but the Government refused, "in view of a report by the Resident who states that Kereng is situated in the vicinity of an unsettled district and the headmen and leading inhabitants of Kereng and Kombun are averse to the opening of a mission in these towns." That was in April, 1914. In November the Rev. E. Hayward had occasion to enter the closed area in order to go to the help of a Resident who had suddenly been seized with blackwater fever. Mr. Hayward had a warm welcome from the people, who remembered a former visit, and he found that the Resident was not even accompanied by his usual posse of native police—a strange proceeding in view of the "unsettled" condition of the country!

Difficulty with government officials

Medical work

There was an increase in the number of patients in the hospital at Kabwir, and the dispensary at Panyam was usually attended by between ten and twenty persons a day.[1]

EAST AFRICA MISSIONS

PAST HISTORY

In 1844 Dr. Krapf, having lately been expelled from Abyssinia, established himself at Mombasa, where two years later he was joined by the Rev. John Rebmann who opened the station at Kisulutini (Rabai) in 1846, and laboured on the coast for twenty-nine years. Their remarkable journeys into the interior led to all the subsequent geographical and missionary enterprise in East Africa. It was chiefly through the efforts of the C.M.S. that the Parliamentary Committee of 1871 was obtained, which led to Sir Bartle Frere's mission to Zanzibar in the following year. In 1874 the Rev. W. S. Price, formerly in charge of a C.M.S. asylum for rescued slaves at Nasik, Western India, was sent out; some 200 African Christians from among the freed slaves who had been under his care were collected as the nucleus of an industrial colony; land was purchased for a settlement, which was named Frere Town, in honour of Sir Bartle Frere; and 500 rescued slaves were, in 1875, received from H.M. cruisers, and housed, fed, instructed, and led to work for their living. In the Taita Country stations were opened at Sagalla in 1883, Mbale in 1900, and Wusi in 1905; at Vitengeni, in the Giriama Country, in 1912; at Kabete and Nairobi, in the Ukamba Province, in 1900 and 1906 respectively; and at Weithaga (1903), Kahuhia (1906), Kabare, Embu (1910), Muitiro (1912), and Kathukeni (1913), in the Kenia Province.

When in 1876 a mission party was sent up-country to establish a Mission in Uganda, the route adopted was from Bagamoyo, on the coast opposite Zanzibar, through Ukaguru, Ugogo, and Unyamwezi; and intermediate stations between the east coast and the southern shore of the Victoria Lake were established, in what is now German territory, at Mpapua and Mamboya in 1876 and 1880. The German East Africa Mission was extended by the occupation of Berega, Nyangala, and Mvumi in 1900; Buigiri in 1901; and Kongwa in 1904.

For these Missions a new bishopric was established in 1884, with "Eastern Equatorial Africa" as the title of the see, and the Rev. J. Hannington was consecrated the first bishop in that year. He was murdered in Busoga in October, 1885, by the orders of Mwanga, king of Uganda. Bishop Hannington's successor, the Rev. H. P. Parker, also had a brief episcopal career, for he died from fever in March, 1888. He was succeeded by the Right Rev. A. R. Tucker, who was consecrated in 1890. In 1897 the diocese was divided into the dioceses of Uganda and Mombasa, and in 1899 the Rev. W. G. Peel, formerly a C.M.S. missionary in South and Western India, was consecrated bishop of the latter. It embraces the whole of the British East Africa Protectorate, with the exception of the native reserves in the western portion of the Nyanza Province, and in German East Africa extends to long. 38° E. and lat. 8° S.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The Society's work in East Africa has developed considerably since the formation of the diocese of Mombasa, and is now carried on in two distinct sections under the Bishop of Mombasa by 24 European clergymen, 3 laymen (1 of them a doctor), 23 missionaries' wives (1 of whom is a doctor), and 18 women missionaries. With these are associated 3 African clergymen and 291 African Christian lay agents.

I. (a) In British East Africa the stations by the coast—Mombasa, Frere Town, and Rabai—are of long standing. There are a boys' hostel at Frere Town; a normal class and the Buxton High School for boys at Mombasa; and a medical mission at Mzizima, on the island of Mombasa. Much care and thought are expended on the pastoral care of the converts, many of whom are liberated slaves or the children of such.

(b) Proceeding inland about a hundred miles there are stations at Sagalla (where is a divinity school), Mbale, and Wusi in the Taita Country. Other stations have been opened of late years farther from the coast at Nairobi, the capital of British East Africa, and elsewhere in the Ukamba Province, and at Weithaga, Kahuhia, and other places around Mount Kenia. At all these the work is mainly evangelistic. There is a medical mission at Kahuhia.

II. In the German East Africa Mission elementary schools are prominent at Berega, Kongwa, Mvumi, Buigiri, and their out-stations. There is a training college for catechists at Kongwa.

Missionaries interned in German E. Africa

THE European war prevents any account being given in this Report of the Society's work in German East Africa, since communication with the missionaries residing there has been entirely cut off. One missionary, however, the Rev. E. W. Crawford, of Kabare in British East Africa, who when hostilities began was in German territory, paying a visit to the Rev. Dr. T. B. R. Westgate, made his escape. He was at Dar-es-Salam, on the return journey, when the "Pegasus" arrived to destroy the wireless tower, and through the efforts of a British settler he and five others succeeded in getting on board, and were taken to Zanzibar. Although no direct news has been received from the C.M.S. missionaries in the country, an official report was cabled home by the Bishop of Zanzibar early in May, to the effect that all of them were at work, but that their release could not be obtained from the Governor.

Hostilities in East Africa

Several raids have been made by the Germans on British territory. In September a force crossed the frontier at Mohoru, but were repulsed by troops from Kisumu, a C.M.S. station near Port Florence, the terminus of the railway, and other actions took place at Gazi, on the coast, in October, and on the Tsavo River, above Mzima, in November. In November also a British force was landed at Tanga, opposite the island of Pemba, but was compelled to retire with casualties amounting to 795 men.[1] German forces thereupon penetrated into British territory along the sea coast north of Tanga, but they were driven out in December. Some fighting has since taken place in German territory. The natives have remained loyal, and the Christians at Mbale and Wusi have been able to render valuable assistance to the military authorities. All along the coast, and in German as well as British territory, the Swahilis, who are Moslems, are said to be praying for the success of the British arms; and in the Zanzibar Protectorate £2000 has been subscribed for the British Red Cross Society by men of many races and creeds.

Little effect on missionary work

Hostilities have not materially affected the work in British East Africa. The demands for labour on the part of the Government caused some unsettlement in the Taita Country which is near the frontier, and affected the attendance at classes at Mbale; and the Rev. V. V. Verbi, whose station is Wusi, has accompanied the British forces to act as interpreter and guide. On the other hand some special opportunities have arisen for work among the Wakavirondo and Banyoro who have congregated at Mombasa.[2]

Towards the end of August a rising against the Government took place in the Giriama Country, which lies north of Mombasa. It was in no wise connected with the European war, but was a revolt against everything European. At first mission property was respected, but after a time an animus against the Mission developed and the mission premises at Vitengeni were burnt to the ground, while Jilore also suffered, though in less degree. In consequence of the rising the missionaries at Vitengeni and Kaloleni had to leave their stations and proceed to Rabai, and were forbidden also to itinerate in the disturbed region.

Rising in the Giriama Country

The Rev. H. T. Robson, who was trained at Islington College, and worked in the Mission from 1885–91, died on 30 November, 1914.

Death of Rev. H. T. Robson

The Rev. J. E. Hamshere has been appointed Archdeacon of Mombasa in succession to Archdeacon H. K. Binns, who has resigned that position.

Miss F. I. Deed completed the revision of St. Luke's Gospel in Giriama; the Rev. H. J. E. Butcher translated parts of the Prayer Book into Kidigo; and the Rev. H. Leakey completed the translation of St. Matthew's Gospel into Kikuyu.

Literary work

I. BRITISH EAST AFRICA MISSION

At a conference of C.M.S. missionaries in British East Africa, which was held at Mombasa in June, 1914, it was decided to send home an earnest appeal for reinforcements. The statement put forth shows that at the time the conference was sitting some of the regularly established stations of the Mission were unoccupied, although only three missionaries were absent on furlough. The conference asked for at least ten recruits, several of whom might be laymen, for direct evangelistic work.

Appeal for reinforcements

1. THE COAST DISTRICTS

The attendance at the Buxton High School at Mombasa was slightly diminished by the war, but when the year closed it was still well over one hundred. For the first time since the school was opened there were as many Africans as Indians among the pupils, an indication, the Rev. S. A. Martin says, that the African will try to obtain some of the important and responsible positions in the protectorate which at the present time are for the most part held by Indians and Asiatics. If this estimate is correct, the importance of mission schools is accentuated, for the government education provided for Africans as well as Indians is purely secular, and yet, to use the words of an address presented to Mr. Victor Buxton by some seventy old boys of the school, "character is more desirable and important in life than the mere acquisition of knowledge or success, and true character is based on the fear and love of God." The normal class at the school has four members. Both at Mombasa and also at Rabai there is a night school attended by between sixty and seventy youths and lads. The technical school at Frere Town, which, though not a C.M.S. institution, is managed by Dr. R. K. Shepherd, had four apprentices in the printing department and eight in the carpentry department; all of them passed the government examination, and one of them was baptized.

Medical work

Two apprentices at the Mzizima hospital also sat for the government examination and passed with credit. Many of the patients hail from up-country, and belong to different tribes, and to address each in his own tongue a knowledge of from ten to twelve languages would be required.

Evangelistic work

Mombasa

The hopeful tone which has marked the Mombasa reports during the last two or three years is conspicuous again in those which deal with the events of 1914. Miss R. M. Wyatt, reopening the women's work in the town after an interval of some eight years, was struck with the changed attitude of the inhabitants. On every hand she met with respect and civility, and she found many indications that Islam has to some extent lost its hold on the people.

"The light is breaking"

"The light is at last breaking," she writes. More than one hundred men were in the baptism and confirmation classes, and results were seen of the work among Indians in the form of the baptism of two of them (the first Indian converts, it is believed, in British East Africa) and the admission of seven others as inquirers. All these people were from the north of India; the Gujerati-speaking Indians, who form the majority in the Indian community, are difficult to influence, and work among them meets with much more opposition than that among Africans.

Indian converts

Movement in the Digo Country

Even more pronounced than the awakening, for such it may almost be called, in Mombasa, is the movement in the Digo Country, which stretches seventy miles to the south. Dr. Krapf, the founder of the Mission, at one time contemplated work in that region, and towards the end of the 'seventies a freed slave, named Samuel Isenberg, who had become a Christian, visited the country in order to preach the Gospel to the Wadigo, his own people. He was murdered by a drunken man who thought he was a soldier sent by the Swahilis. Other efforts were afterwards made to evangelize the district, and Shimba was occupied for a time. In 1911 a new beginning was made by evangelistic bands from Mombasa, and they have found open doors on all sides.[1] The land is gradually being covered with school-churches. The first to be erected was at Matuga, a Mohammedan centre, and the second at Golini, near the old Shimba station; at both these places some inquirers have been enrolled, and at Golini the people are "reading in relays from morning to night." There are several features of special interest in connexion with this movement. First, it is being carried on mainly by voluntary workers; second, some of these workers in former days attended the mission school at Shimba, though at the time they made no profession of faith in Christ; and, third, the expenses of the men at three of the centres are defrayed by the African Church Council at Mombasa.[1] The work received an impetus in 1914 by the Rev. H. J. E. Butcher taking up his residence in the country at the request of the Government, who instructed him "to go about on ordinary missionary work, to endeavour to keep the people free from any alarm or unrest, and to be on the alert for any information which might be of value."

Work largely indigenous

Rabai

Passing from the south of Mombasa to the north, Rabai is reached, where there are more Christians than at any other station in the Mission. There is much evangelistic work there; and many Bible classes are held for women and girls, of whom about twenty were under preparation for baptism or confirmation. Classes for women are conducted also at three of the out-stations in the Giriama Country, which lies to the north and north-east of Rabai, and is seventy miles in length, and between twenty and forty miles in width. The desire in that region to be taught, which was mentioned in last year's Report,[2] appeared to increase in 1914. Forty-two youths were admitted as inquirers at Jilore, and five as catechumens; at Tsangalaweni the corresponding numbers were six and three; and at Vitengeni, where lack of water hindered the building of the new station, ten and fifteen. More readers and twenty-four fresh inquirers are reported from Kaloleni, with a better proportion of women among them; and at one or two places in the neighbourhood of Jimba, where the Rev. L. F. Gore, an African clergyman, was in charge, the people built or were proposing to build huts to serve as schools and churches.

The Giriama country

Pastoral work

Pastoral work is carried on chiefly at Frere Town and Rabai. At both stations the tone of the Christians improved, and no serious cases of immorality occurred at Frere Town as in some former years. The danger to the converts from the proximity of Mombasa, and from being practically surrounded by Mohammedans, is real and great, for any public opinion that there is with regard to acts of immorality is rather in their favour than otherwise. Some backsliders were reclaimed at Rabai, but there were instances in which Christian families joined in the native dances, with which much that is objectionable and evil is often associated. Nearly all the converts at Kaloleni remained loyal when the revolt broke out.

2. THE INTERIOR

Sagalla

With the exception of Sagalla, which first received a resident missionary in 1883, all the stations in the interior of British East Africa have been opened since 1899. Three, including Sagalla, are in the Taita Country. Little progress was discernible at that station, indeed the attendance at the Sunday services was smaller than in 1913, but this is partly accounted for by the fact that many of the men left the station either to obtain means of subsistence or to meet the demands of the Government for labour. An out-station was opened at Mleguia, on the Voi River. More than thirty persons were admitted as inquirers at Mbale, and about twenty to the catechumenate, while four adults were baptized. A Bible class for men is well attended, and nearly 6000 attendances were registered at the dispensary. Many of the Christians at Wusi, likewise, are zealous and consistent. Voluntary bands of men made themselves responsible for the maintenance of the evangelistic work when the Rev. V. V. Verbi left to serve with the British forces, while Johane, the chief, when summoned by some government officials to a palaver on a Sunday, refused to attend, saying that he went to worship God on that day. An agent was stationed at Taveta (where some years ago there were seven resident European missionaries) until war began and the mission house was seized and fortified by the Germans. When Mrs. Verbi visited the place in May, 1914, some old women begged for a woman missionary, affirming that at the government station in the district the young women were led to become wives of the Mohammedan soldiers by being told that Islam was the same as Christianity, since it baptized its converts.

Nairobi

About 150 miles farther inland than Wusi lies Nairobi, the head-quarters of the protectorate administration. Here the attendance at the services was larger than ever, and the church, St. Stephen's, which in 1913 was enlarged so as to accommodate about 150 more persons, was again overcrowded. School work is carried on in the morning and afternoon of each weekday, and on three evenings as well, and the various sessions are attended by different sets of boys. Efforts are also made to reach the women, who belong to different tribes, are mostly quite young and unmarried, have no occupation and do not desire any, and many of whom are nominal Mohammedans. Six young women, the firstfruits of this work, were baptized during the year, and twenty were admitted as inquirers. Besides these, fifty-four boys received baptism; 120 others were in the baptismal classes; and eighty others were preparing for admission to the catechumenate. The contributions of the people were almost double what they were in 1913.[1]

First women converts

Of the remaining stations, one, Kabete, is in the Ukamba Province, and six (one of them, however, left without a European missionary in 1914) are in the Kenia Province, but all are situated in Kikuyu, which stretches away in a northerly direction from between mile 230 to mile 360 of the Uganda Railway for a distance of some one hundred miles, and has a population of about 800,000.[1] Many encouragements were met with at Kabete: the consistent lives of the Christians; the increase in the number of girls at school or under Christian instruction in some other way; the growth of the day school, which is attended mainly by young men aged between 16 and 22; and the good work of the Sunday school, which has sixty heathen as well as a number of Christian pupils—all these things are grounds for thankfulness. Most of the youths at school are desirous of baptism, and of the thirty-four new catechumens half were won through the school work. In the villages at a little distance from Kabete the apparent indifference of the people is gradually being overcome. The evangelistic services at Kahuhia on Sunday mornings are attended by from 200 to 300 persons, and the medical work attracts some sixty persons a day, but efforts to influence the women have not met with much success. The work "appears to be all ploughing and turning up the sod," says Miss E. C. Wilde. There is little to report concerning the new stations at Muitiro and Kathukeni. At the former the natives showed stolid indifference; but at Kathukeni the services were well attended, the dispensary was appreciated, and a good beginning was made with a school.[2] At Weithaga, which was occupied in 1903, there is a little band of Christians, of whom a bright account is given. Some, it is true, fell into sin, but in most cases there were signs of repentance and a resolution to amend, while in many of the converts a manifest deepening of the spiritual life took place. This was aided by some special meetings held in June, 1914, which were followed towards the end of the year by gatherings of the older workers and of the younger Christians to consider what there was in their lives to hinder the influence of their testimony for Christ. At these meetings there was much heart-searching, and many were led to confess sins which burdened their consciences. All the men Christians and catechumens devote Wednesdays to preaching at the markets which are held in the district, while the women Christians go on Fridays; the Gospel, it is said, has brought into the lives of these women "a beauty and light that it is a daily joy to witness." As many as 500 persons are often present at the services at Weithaga, and almost the same number sometimes gather at Gatwiku and Kaheti, where new wattle-and-daub churches have been built by the people; regular services are also held at Njumbi and Kiruri, two other out-stations. Excellent work is done at Fort Hall by Petre Njeregi,[3] who is engaged by the Government as office boy. From the first he set to work to influence the other young men about the Fort, with the result that he has had the joy of seeing some of them baptized and others admitted to the catechumenate. One of the lay helpers, Jacobo Muchiri, was appointed chief by the Government at the unanimous choice of the elders of the district—the first Christian in Kikuyu to be placed in such a position of responsibility. The Rev. A. W. McGregor says :—

> The vile houses which used to flaunt their wicked signs in the shape of a white flag, immediately on his appointment were compelled to haul down the same. The drinking of intoxicating beer by young men was forbidden, and he is the first chief in Kikuyu to attempt to stamp out the murder of twins. The success of his work or otherwise will no doubt in the near future largely influence the Government in the appointment of other chiefs.

Eighteen adults, five of them women, received baptism ; twenty-one were admitted as catechumens ; and forty-nine as inquirers.

II. GERMAN EAST AFRICA MISSION

Method of developing work

A STRIKING map of the C.M.S. sphere in German East Africa, which appeared in the "Church Missionary Review,"[1] indicated 370 stations, out-stations, and sub-out-stations, at which regular and systematic teaching of Holy Scripture was being given, and where also reading and writing were taught, thrice a week at the stations, twice a week at the out-stations, or once a fortnight at the sub-out-stations. The plan adopted was to open a station, and then regularly teach (not merely preach) at regular intervals but as often as possible at sub-out-stations, spending perhaps two or three nights away from the station. As the work became established, a "teacher" and a "helper" were located at some place favourable to itinerating operations ; this became the centre of efforts which reached different places round on three or five days in the week, Sunday being the day for special services to which people who cared to do so (many did care) came. In this way all the people in a given neighbourhood were gradually afforded some opportunity of hearing the Gospel and of learning to read and write.

As already stated, the war has prevented any report of the work in the Mission during 1914 from being furnished.

UGANDA MISSION

PAST HISTORY

The original impetus to the exploration of Africa from the east coast was given by the C.M.S. missionaries, Krapf, Rebmann, and Erhardt. They communicated to Europe the first report of the lake system of the interior, which led to the journeys of Burton, Speke, and Grant, and, incidentally, to those of Stanley. In November, 1875, in consequence of information sent home by the last named of the readiness of Mtesa, king of Uganda, to receive Christian teachers, and of two anonymous donations of £5000 each being offered in order that a missionary expedition might be sent to his dominions, the Society resolved, in dependence upon God, to organize a Mission in Uganda, and a well-equipped party accordingly proceeded to East Africa in the spring of 1876. The first leader, Lieut. G. Shergold Smith, R.N., and Mr. T. O'Neill were killed, and Dr. J. Smith died before reaching the country. The Mission, however, maintained its position in Uganda from July, 1877, and that notwithstanding tremendous difficulties. A French Roman Catholic Mission arrived in 1879. King Mtesa, who died in 1884, was succeeded by Mwanga, and the new king was led to regard the missionaries with suspicion. He caused Bishop Hannington, while in Busoga, en route for Uganda from the coast, to be murdered on 31 October, 1885. The storm reached its climax in the arrest of many African Christians, several of whom were tortured and burnt to death. In August, 1888, King Mwanga was driven from the throne. In October, through the hostility of the Mohammedan Arabs, the English and French missionaries were expelled from the country, and a period of revolution and bloodshed ensued. In October, 1889, exactly a year after the missionaries' expulsion, Mwanga re-entered Uganda and regained his throne through the help of his Christian subjects, and two of the missionaries returned with him. Alexander Mackay, however, one of the pioneer missionaries, died in 1890 while at the south end of the Lake. In the same year Mwanga accepted a British flag from the representatives of the Imperial British East Africa Company. Sir Gerald Portal reached Uganda, as Queen's Commissioner, in March, 1893, and in April, 1894, the British Government declared the country a British protectorate. In the summer of 1897 Mwanga fled from the capital, and his infant son Chwa, baptized by the name of David, was proclaimed king. In September of the same year a serious mutiny of the Sudanese troops broke out; several European officers were seized and murdered; and one of the missionaries, Mr. G. L. Pilkington, who in response to the appeal of the authorities was accompanying the government forces as interpreter, lost his life. The country of Busoga first had a resident missionary in 1891, and in the five following years there was rapid expansion in the kingdom of Buganda; Toro was occupied in 1896; Bunyoro in 1899; Kavirondo in 1900; Ankole in 1901; the Acholi country in 1904; and Bukedi in 1908.

In 1897 the diocese of Eastern Equatorial Africa was subdivided, the Uganda Protectorate, according to the boundaries then obtaining (which have since been altered), being formed into the diocese of Uganda, which Bishop Tucker elected to retain, relinquishing the remainder to form the diocese of Mombasa. He resigned in 1911, and Bishop Willis was consecrated as his successor in 1912.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

I. Many of the counties in the kingdom of Buganda, which is co-terminous with the province of that name, have been occupied by British missionaries or Baganda clergymen.

Candidates are prepared for ordination in the theological school at Mukono; training classes for men are held at various stations; and men school teachers are trained in a normal school at Kampala, the capital. For women there are evangelists' training classes at Kampala and elsewhere, and a normal school for girls at Gayaza. The schools include an intermediate school (known as the King's School) at Budo, and lower grade schools at Kampala, Mukono (Bishop's School), Ndeje, Mityana, Kalaki, and Kikise, all of them for the sons of chiefs and for others who can pay the fees; a girls' boarding school at Gayaza; and a considerable number of elementary schools. All the schools are supported by the Uganda Church, the C.M.S. providing only the salaries of the European missionaries engaged in them. At Kampala there is also the Mengo hospital, to which several dispensaries are affiliated.

II. In the Western Province, which comprises the kingdoms of Ankole and Toro, and in the kingdom of Bunyoro, in the Northern Province, the training of evangelists is prosecuted at Mbarara, Kabarole, and Hoima, and at each station there is also a lower grade school. There is a hospital at Kabarole. Work has lately been begun at Gulu, in the Acholi country.

III. In Busoga work is of long standing; but in Bukedi, which, like Busoga, is in the Eastern Province, and in Kavirondo, which is in the East Africa Protectorate, it is still in its infancy. There are training classes for evangelists at Kamuli and Ng'ora, and for women evangelists at Iganga, and lower grade boys' schools at Kamuli, Ng'ora, Nabumale, and Kalaki.

The pastoral care of the 105,000 Christians connected with the Society in the Mission is shared by European missionaries and Baganda, Batoro, and Banyoro clergymen. All the African clergymen and lay teachers, who now number 39 and 3388 respectively, have always been entirely maintained by the contributions of the people, save that since 1910 a number of evangelists have been sent to the Bukedi country, who are supported from money voted to the diocese by the Committee entrusted with the distribution of the unallotted portion of the Pan-Anglican Thankoffering.

Throughout the Mission evangelistic work is largely in the hands of African evangelists superintended by European missionaries.

The staff of the Mission consists, besides Bishop Willis, of 36 European clergymen, 5 doctors, 6 other laymen, 32 missionaries' wives, and 33 other women missionaries; 9 of the women are trained nurses, working in connexion with the medical missions.

Deaths of Bishop Tucker

BISHOP TUCKER, to whom the Uganda Mission owes, perhaps, more than to any other man, died suddenly at the Deanery, Westminster, on 15 June, 1914. He was on his way to the Jerusalem Chamber to attend a meeting of the Archbishops' Committee on Faith and Order when he was taken with the fatal seizure. He was at once carried to the Deanery, and there an hour or two later he breathed his last. Bishop Tucker was consecrated on 25 April, 1890, as successor to Bishop Parker, and sailed the same day for his diocese, which then included the present diocese of Mombasa as well as that of Uganda. Throughout his episcopate he was incessant in his journeys, while his powerful speeches and writings served to call forth much prayer and service, as well as money gifts, for the work in Africa. His most notable speech was that at the Gleaners' Union anniversary in 1891, when he appealed for and obtained £15,000 to enable the Imperial British East Africa Company to prolong its occupation of Uganda—a step to which England owes mainly her empire in Eastern Equatorial Africa and her command of the sources of the Nile. It is to Bishop Tucker, too, that the Uganda Church owes its constitution, which was adopted in April, 1909. He resigned his see in 1911, having seen the Uganda Church grow from 200 to 70,000 members. A memorial service was held at St. Bride's Church, Fleet Street, at which the Archbishop of Canterbury gave an address.[1]

and Mrs. A. L. Kitching

Mrs. A. L. Kitching died in Uganda on 27 November, 1914. A sister of the Rev. A. B. Lloyd, she was married to the Rev. (now Archdeacon) A. L. Kitching in 1907.

Need of European reinforcements

Although the Society's Uganda Mission is well manned in comparison with other Missions of the Society, it is less so than the two Roman Catholic Missions (French and English), which have 159 priests and lay workers, and forty-one nuns in the country. There are many strategic positions, notably in the Northern and Eastern Provinces and in Kavirondo, which call either for occupation or to have their staff of C.M.S. workers strengthened, and the Board of Missions in Uganda issued a statement in the summer of 1914, pointing out that to cover the diocese twelve men ought to be sent out that year, and the same number annually for the next five or six years.[2]

Diocesan Board of Missions

The Board of Missions, just referred to, administers annually a sum of about £500, four-fifths of which is the interest of the grant made from the Pan-Anglican Thank-offering, which the late Bishop Tucker invested to serve as endowment, yielding a gradually diminishing income until 1922. This portion of the fund it is hoped to spend chiefly on buildings, while for the support of the workers the "own missionary" plan, which has been adopted by the King's School at Budo and in two other cases, is being commended to the Baganda Christians. The board is principally concerned with the work in Bukedi and the Teso Country, whither Baganda teachers are sent; it has nothing to do with the work in Buganda, Ankole, Toro, and Bunyoro, which is supported by local contributions. These have been increased lately by means of the formation of guilds of helpers called bazimbi, or builders.

The bazimbi

Every adult Christian is urged to give at least one rupee each year, and every Christian child half a rupee, and those promising to do so have their names written down and bear the title quoted, the idea being to make each individual convert realize that he or she has a share in the support and building up of the Church and its work. The people, moreover, are called upon to contribute to the fund for building the new cathedral which, owing to the rise in wages and the increase in the price of materials, is likely to cost at least double the original estimate of £20,000. At a meeting, consisting of 129 delegates, held in 1914, it was agreed to ask chiefs to give thirty per cent of their rents annually to the fund; interpreters and workmen drawing good pay, five per cent of their wages; unskilled workmen, 75 cents (1*s.*) per annum; women 25 cents; and children 10 cents until the cathedral is finished.

Three hindrances: (1) The war

The work in the diocese met with three special hindrances during the year under review. First and foremost was the war. The tribes around Kisii, a government station near the German boundary on the east of the Victoria Lake, and some of the South Kavirondo tribes, revolted and looted mission stations and government stores, but with these exceptions all the people remained loyal. The Kavirondo chiefs of the Kisumu district, where the Society has a station, spontaneously presented the Government with some 3500 goats for the troops at the suggestion of some of their number who had been educated at the mission school at Maseno; Sir Apolo Kagwa, the Katikiro of Buganda, announced his readiness to place himself at the head of an army of 5000 men and march against the Germans; five chiefs wrote to the acting Governor requesting permission to "go to England and join the English Army with our 500 men"; and both chiefs and peasants, according to the Rev. R. H. Leakey, "would attack German East Africa to-morrow if they had their way." All the missionaries offered their services to the authorities, as did the boys of the normal, high, and central schools at Kampala. Some of the lads were chosen as cyclist messengers, others were trained as stretcher bearers and dressers and were sent to the front, while twenty-five boys of the King's School reinforced the armed police at Kampala. Twelve of the boys at the Maseno industrial school also acted as scouts and dispatch riders until the field telegraphs were completed. The Mengo hospital was offered to the Government and accepted as a base hospital, and was linked up with the government telephone system, Drs. A. R. and J. H. Cook being gazetted as civil surgeons in charge, with the temporary rank of captain. Some fighting has taken place in the south of Budu, and a number of sick and wounded men have been sent to the hospital at Kampala from the front; there has also been an engagement at Kisii, whence the Germans were obliged to retreat. The leader of the Uganda forces, Nasanieri Mayanja by name, is a Protestant Christian. For some years he was one of Bishop Tucker's most trusted servants; then, having served as a teacher for a time, he entered the King's School at Budo, and was one of the first Budo boys to get an official chieftainship. After going to the front he sent several times to the Rev. E. Millar, the secretary of the Mission, for reading books, so that he might be able to teach some of the soldiers under him. These events affected the work in several ways. The presence of the African levies at Kampala made the women and girls afraid to go about the streets and diminished the attendance at the school and classes; at

Loyalty of the natives

Dislocation of the work at some centres

Entebbe the fear of invasion caused many of the people to move inland, with the result that their children's education was suspended; from Ndeje the head chief of Bulemezi, with 1000 of his fighting men, was called to Kampala to be ready for any emergency, while the county of Kyagwe furnished a like contingent under its chief, Ham Mukasa, the Sekibobo, and this entailed the absence from the districts of many of the leading Christians, together with their retainers and servants, and so affected the number of baptisms and the amount of the contributions of the people; in Bunyoro levies were made for porterage in connexion with the war, and to avoid this service the natives fled to their plantations, and a drop was caused of some thirty per cent in the number baptized during the year and in the attendance at the schools; while in Kigezi, the missionary sphere of the Ankole Church, which is near the German boundary on the west of the lake, the teachers at several places were forced to leave, some of them barely escaping with their lives. But though the work was thus seriously dislocated in certain places, the war happily does not seem anywhere to have affected the attitude of the people towards Christianity.

(2) Scarcity of food

Another event which militated against progress was the great scarcity of food, amounting almost to famine, which prevailed in the early part of 1914. It made life hard for the women and girls, the breadwinners of the country, and through causing the people to scatter in search of food, and diminishing their strength and enthusiasm, brought about a considerable falling off in the attendance at classes and services.

(3) A new sect

The third, and in many ways most serious, hindrance arose from the appearance of a new sect. It appears that the word for "charmer" in the Luganda version of Deuteronomy xviii. 11 is "omusawo," and that the same word is used in common speech for a doctor; and this has led certain of the Christians to the conclusion that doctors are persons to be avoided. Dr. J. H. Cook wrote in December:—

Its origin

For some twenty years or so a chief, Mugema, has held the view that it is wrong to take medicine, because God is the healer. He holds what practically amount to the views of Christian Science (so-called). He considers that doctors are the emissaries of the evil one, because they try to prevent people from dying when it may be God's will for them to die! He wrote to the synod in 1912 protesting against prayer being offered up in the churches [during the week of universal prayer] for doctors, or hospitals, or dispensaries, or even medical missions. But until quite recently he only had quite a small following of natives dependent on him. A few months ago, however, a native teacher, called Malaki, threw in his lot with Mugema, and to increase the number of their following Malaki started indiscriminate baptism, giving no instruction to candidates, requiring no testimony as to their characters, holding no service over them, but giving them Christian names if they agreed to subscribe to the Mugema's doctrines of Christian Science. In a few days, or at most a week or two, over 2000 were baptized.[1]

[1] "C.M. Rev.," Feb., 1915, p. 122.

Further details as to the teaching and procedure of this sect, which is called the Kitala sect, from the fact that Malaki, the teacher, lives at a place of that name, near Entebbe, though they themselves give the title "The Church which does not Drink Medicine" to their body, are furnished by the Rev. F. Rowling, who wrote from Entebbe in November :—

Teaching and methods of "The Church which does not Drink Medicine."

There is no instruction, no preparation, no inquiry as to life, no vows are asked or taken; there are no sponsors and no probation. Monogamy is rejected as not ordered in Scripture; medicine similarly; to take this is the "sin against the Holy Ghost"; polygamists and their "wives" are equally welcomed; the only question asked being, "Do you believe that God is Almighty?" Then comes the "baptism," this, they claim, being according to St. John the Baptist's and St. Peter's method. Catechumens under instruction are called to come to them at once, as they can be "baptized" without any further training; polygamists are told they have no need to put away any "wives"; others, that Mugema, the county chief, their leader, has paid a big sum to the Government and got leave to baptize any who wish to come; others, that the Germans are coming soon, and they ought to come and be baptized first, etc., etc. They absolutely refuse to meet the Bishop or diocesan council, and the "teachers" regard themselves as quite equal to either in authority.

The immediate result in this district, where the "baptisms" are taking place, has been to half empty our village churches, and take away from us many of those preparing for baptism. The leaders claim that their "teaching" will bring to them practically all the heathen from the countries round Uganda, and leave us this country only, and even there only those who have already joined us or the Romanist missions. Semei Kakungulu, until lately the paramount "over-lord" of Busoga and Bukedi, residing at Mbale, has now joined them, and is very active in spreading the movement, in which his leading position counts heavily. His immediate reason came from the government regulations. On his way to the Kabaka's coming-of-age ceremonies he passed through Jinja, and owing to the presence of plague there was notified that all who wished to proceed to Uganda must first be inoculated against plague. This he most indignantly refused to undergo, and hence his present action.

The sect was discussed at a meeting of the diocesan council, but the issues were so confused that there was the greatest difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to the main object of the movement, whether it was aimed chiefly against medicine, or preparation for baptism, or Christian discipline; some were led astray by this, and some by that, of its many phases. It was eventually decided that "a campaign of instruction and enlightenment is the best method of protecting Christian people, and of winning some of the heathen who have been misled." These steps apparently were effective, for the Rev. J. Britton says that numbers of those so recklessly "baptized" were putting themselves under proper instruction before the year closed. The movement also received a check through the firm action of Ham Mukasa, the Sekibobo. Malaki entered the Mukono district without any letter of authority, though the law is that no one may go from one country to another without a letter showing whence he has come and what he has come for. The Sekibobo accordingly ordered Malaki to appear before him, and produce his authority. He was convicted, and the Kampala Court confirmed the conviction, and forbade his going about the country.

Bishop Willis has appointed the Rev. A. L. Kitching to be Archdeacon of Bukedi, and the Rev. W. Chadwick to be Archdeacon of Kavirondo. The Committee have accepted the resignation of the Rev. T. Owrid.

Literary work

Archdeacon G. K. Baskerville acted as chairman of a committee of Baganda engaged in the revision of St. Matthew's Gospel; the Rev. H. T. C. Weatherhead, too, was occupied with the revision of the New Testament, and in addition edited a monthly magazine, "Ebifa mu Buganda," which has a circulation of 900, and compiled some school textbooks; while the Rev. J. Britton published a pamphlet embodying his lecture notes on teaching. All this work was in Luganda. Archdeacon Kitching translated St. John's Gospel and some hymns into Teso, revised a reading sheet in that language, and prepared a Teso-English grammar and vocabularies; he also translated a few hymns into Gang. The Rev. A. J. Leech revised part of 1 Corinthians in Lugisu, and translated a portion of St. Luke's Gospel, some Psalms and hymns, the First Catechism, and an elementary Prayer Book into Luhanga.

I. BUGANDA PROVINCE

The Kabaka's marriage and coronation

THE year 1914 will be memorable to the Kabaka, Daudi Chwa, for three events. First, on August 8, his eighteenth birthday, authority to rule was formally transferred to him by the acting Governor from the three Baganda regents who had previously borne the burden of government; and about a week later the Kabaka sat for the first time in his Lukiko, or Council, and received the homage of his chiefs and people. Second, on September 19, he married Irene, daughter of the Rev. Yonasani Kaidzi, the head pupil in the boarding school at Gayaza, whom her teacher, Miss A. L. Allen, describes as "a true Christian and a clever girl."[1] And third, on November 7, his investiture, or the native coronation ceremony, took place on Budo hill, about eight miles from the capital, which for centuries has been regarded as sacred for that purpose. In several respects the coronation differed from that of all previous kings of Uganda, but notably in its being a Christian service, conducted by the Bishop of Uganda, for whose return to the country the ceremony had been deferred, and in the position accorded to the Kabaka's Consort, who was crowned with a silver circlet. It may be mentioned here, as symptomatic of the changes which Christianity is working in the land, that the great chiefs, when riding to Budo in their rickshaws for the coronation service, had their wives or women relatives sitting beside them.[1]

Evangelistic work

Recent returns from the province of Buganda show that the population includes 303,101 heathen and 48,344 Mohammedans, as compared with 325,139 Christians, 143,042 of them Protestants, and 182,097 Roman Catholics. These figures show that even in the most fully evangelized portion of the diocese there is still much land to be possessed. But in reading the annual letters of the missionaries in the Buganda Province, and, in lesser degree, those in other sections of the Mission, it is noticeable that they contain comparatively few references to evangelistic work, while baptisms are hardly mentioned, although more than 4000 adults were baptized in the province. Indeed, the only material piece of information about evangelistic work in the kingdom of Buganda, beyond that which has already been given, is that the station at Kikise has been given up in favour of a new site at Kako, about a mile and a half away. The reason for this lack of news about Evangelistic work is that the task of making the Gospel known to the people, and of receiving converts into the visible Church, lies almost entirely in the hands of the African clergymen and agents of the Uganda Church, by whom no reports are furnished to the Committee, the duties of the missionaries being in the main those of superintending districts, training evangelists and school teachers, or conducting the more advanced schools.

Theological Hall

The leading educational institution in the Mission is the Theological Hall at Mukono, where during the first part of 1914 twenty candidates for ordination were in residence. In the summer, however, a good deal of disaffection arose among the men on account of their being called upon to keep the courtyards weeded, etc.; two senior Baganda clergymen took the side of the disaffected, and on reassembling in September only eight of the students were willing to sign the rules, though six others afterwards fell into line. Pride was probably the cause of the trouble, for hoeing in Uganda is women's work, though chiefs and others have taken up cultivation; but if the clergy of the future regard it as beneath their dignity to engage in such work, the schools, which are largely supported by the church estates, are likely to suffer through the influence of their example. The same difficulty is felt as concerns other agents, and the question is to be considered by the synod. A Class for Senior Evangelists was held at Kako, and classes for candidates for the diocesan junior evangelists' certificate were conducted at several centres, that at Ndeje, of which the Rev. O. N. Kyebakola was in charge, having twenty-two members, three of whom hoped to take up foreign work. There were fifty-four students, candidates for the second or third certificate, in the Normal School at Kampala, while candidates for the first certificate were taught at the head central stations.[1] With a view to raising up men qualified for conducting these district normal classes, a "head masters' class" was opened at the normal school, with five men in it.

Normal School

The organization for training women and girls is somewhat similar to, though less advanced than, that for men. Fourteen women studied for the first or second certificate at Kampala, where they were accommodated in the hostel vacated by the divinity students; unhappily, insubordination and quarrels were not infrequent, and there was one distressing case of immorality. Another class for senior evangelists was held at Ndeje, which was joined at their own request by two who already held the second certificate, as they felt that after several years' work they needed some further instruction and reviving. A Normal School for girls who have already had some training in local schools and also a year's practical experience in a village school, was opened at Gayaza with five inmates. There are seven schools in the Ndeje district under girl teachers, and many more are wanted there and elsewhere, for boy teachers, sharing in some measure as they do the old views concerning the opposite sex, are not really suitable for the charge of mixed schools. But there is great difficulty in obtaining, or rather in keeping girl teachers, for the educated girls are in great demand by the youth of the country in marriage, and of course they are not available after marriage, as the boys are, for educational work.

A new normal school for girls

There are four classes of boys' schools in the province. First, there are the Primary Schools, many of them with girls as well as boys in them. These are very numerous. In the Ndeje district, for example, there are ninety-three schools, containing nearly 10,000 children, a number largely in excess of that in all the Society's schools in China. Next come the Central Schools, which cater for the middle class, and are attended mainly by the sons of minor chiefs, and in which some English is taught. The central school at Kampala, formerly known as the day school, has between 300 and 400 pupils; that at Ndeje has eighty boys; the Bishop's School at Mukono, another central school, has about seventy; and so on. From these schools some of the lads pass on to the King's School, and the Mityana boys did well in the entrance examination at that school in 1914, the six candidates gaining four of the first eight places, and all being successful. A little higher than the central schools, though more so in the matter of fees than in any other particular, is the High School at Kampala, which is available only for the wealthier people. Most of the pupils are the sons of the great ruling chiefs, and the fees are so heavy that they only send their most promising boys, and expect great things from them in return for the expense. Last of all comes the King's School at Budo, where, although English is one of the subjects, all the teaching is given in the vernacular. Eight of the boys who left during the year took up posts as teachers in mission schools, three of them going beyond their own country of Buganda. In the spring forty boys were taken on a trip to Nairobi, where they were shown the railway works, a saw mill, and printing works. Such experiences have a real educative value. Among the girls' schools the only one of higher than elementary grade is the Girls' Boarding School at Gayaza, where the pupils are for the most part the daughters of chiefs or of clergymen. It was from this school, as has already been stated, that the Kabaka chose his bride. The number of names on the school roll increased steadily, and reached one hundred before the year closed.

Medical work

Year by year the buildings of the Mengo hospital at Kampala are extended, the latest addition being a block, consisting of fourteen small wards, intended for the accommodation of the large number of Hindu and Mohammedan patients who seek the help of the doctors. The patients are drawn from a wide area. Among them are natives from all parts of Uganda, Busoga, and Bukedi, and even from German East Africa, Kisumu, and Nairobi, besides Europeans and Indians from Mombasa and Zanzibar and from Tanga, in German East Africa. The hospital compound now contains the following buildings: (1) a general hospital, with eighty-five beds, for Baganda and other African races; (2) the Roosevelt isolation block, with thirty-nine beds, a native hospital for the treatment of septic cases; (3) the Indian block, with accommodation for twenty-eight patients; (4) the Annie Walker Memorial Hospital for Europeans, with fourteen beds; and (5) the Wellcome dispensary and the dynamo house. A dying Mohammedan woman was baptized in the hospital during the year; in the European ward there were signs of definite spiritual blessing; and several other interesting cases occurred in which patients appeared to be influenced by the Gospel, including that of a Mohammedan Nubian, who asked for a reading book, and taught the other patients from it. Both at Ndeje and Mukono, where there are branch dispensaries, the work was on a larger scale than in 1913, and the two little wards at the latter station were nearly always full, more than forty in-patients being received during the year.

Pastoral work

In some parts of the Buganda Province the converts displayed liberality, but at others, though the people are more wealthy than they were, their gifts have not increased in proportion. Indeed, there are several indications that the Church is more and more becoming exposed to the dangers of prosperity. The "yellow peril," the love of money, which is so unhappily conspicuous at home, is not unknown in Uganda. Many of the young men offer themselves for training as pupil teachers, not from any desire to help others, but because they know that if they show promise they will be given free normal training after a year's work in a village school, and then may easily get positions as clerks on coffee plantations or in government offices, and so obtain a salary three or four times as great as is offered by the Mission. The race for wealth and the desire to become landowners cause a dearth of offers of service, and it is said that the Buganda Church is not sending out missionaries in the same numbers as a year or two ago, while efforts to induce women communicants at Kampala to volunteer as district visitors has met with little success. It is possible, however, that the abnormal situation caused by the war, and the consequent great demand for labour may account in large measure for this apparent lack of evangelistic zeal. On the other hand, a gratifying story is told concerning the Baganda Company of the King's African Rifles, who have been at the front. When visited by the Rev. W. Chadwick in Kavirondo the Protestants among them asked for an administration of the Holy Communion. It was impossible to arrange it at once, and when after a fortnight or so the officer in command was consulted, he at once gave his consent to the service being held, but added that about twenty or thirty of the pick of the company had in the interval been sent to the fighting line. Inquiry showed that nearly all the Protestant communicants were included among these picked men! The spiritual condition of the Christians must depend largely, under God, on the character of their teachers, many of whom are at isolated posts and have no books beyond the Bible, a Prayer Book, and a hymn book; and the synod of the diocese has accordingly decided that a retreat for them shall be held annually in each district. One was conducted at Kikoma in 1914. The teachers spent a week at the station, and a special course of instruction was given them on such doctrinal subjects as baptism, confirmation, and the Holy Communion, and also lectures on the Bible in general and one or two books in particular. Seeing that some of the Baganda Christians, by an extraordinary perversion of ingenuity, use the Bible in defence of laxity of life, quoting the example of Old Testament heroes in justification of polygamy, and pleading St. Paul's counsel to Timothy, our Lord's institution of the Holy Communion, and His increasing the supply of wine at Cana in extenuation of drunkenness, some such steps for the instruction of the teachers are obviously desirable.

II. WESTERN PROVINCE

THE Western Province comprises the kingdoms of Ankole and Toro, in each of which there is but one station manned by Europeans.

Ankole

In Ankole work is carried on among the Baganda, the Bahima, the ruling class, and the Bairu, the peasants. The Bairu in the past have been downtrodden, the "hewers of wood and drawers of water" in the country, but they are now beginning to assert themselves. The Roman Catholics are making great headway among them, but the Bahima are still either Protestants or heathen. The king and most of the leading chiefs are Protestant Christians. The Church in Ankole has lately been granted the status of a settled district in the diocese, with its own church council, since it is self-supporting, and is also a missionary Church, sending out its teachers to Kigezi, in the extreme south-west of the protectorate. Owing to the illness of the Mutoro teacher who had been doing the work, the class for confirmation candidates at Mbarara was taken by Esther, the queen, while another leading woman became responsible for the women's baptism class. There is a normal class at the station and a class of teachers reading for the junior certificate under the Rev. Aloni Muyinda. The foundation stone of new buildings for the high school was laid by the Governor of Uganda in February, 1914. The school is attended by about fifty boys, each of whom pays Rs 50 per annum to defray the expenses of his clothing, food, books, etc. The Banyankole show little wish for the education of their girls, their only desires for them being that they should drink plenty of milk and get fat, and the girls' boarding school has but twenty-three pupils. In the Kitoju pastorate, twenty-one miles west of Mbarara, where the Rev. Silasi Aliwonya is in charge, several new churches were built in 1914, and many people were under instruction for baptism or confirmation. The work in the missionary district of Kigezi, which contains a population of 150,000, and where ten of the fourteen teachers are Banyankole, supported by their own Church, was interfered with by the war, but four new out-stations were occupied, and 150 persons were under instruction at the end of the year.

New out-stations

Toro

A new departure was made at Kabarole in Toro by opening a normal class, designed to serve the whole of the Western Province. The cost of training, and also the jealousy of the tribes, who mutually despise each other's language and wish to be taught in Luganda, of which they know but little, served to keep the number of candidates down to eight. The high school is small, but the girls' boarding school has sixty pupils. The boarders attend the day school, in which many of the elder girls are most helpful. Cotton spinning is taught to all the children, and the boarders in addition learn some branch of native work, such as basket making or mat making. Between forty and fifty girls at the station are being prepared for baptism. More Europeans were treated in the hospital at Kabarole than in any previous year, but otherwise there was not much change in the number of patients. They paid good attention to the teaching which was given; a Mohammedan expressed his desire to forsake Islam and follow Christ; and among the African assistants, of whom Dr. A. Bond speaks highly, one of the men and one of the girls received baptism during the year, and two other girls were under instruction.[1]

III. NORTHERN PROVINCE

In this province, again, the work is in two distinct sections. In Bunyoro it has been established for about fifteen years, and between 2000 and 3000 people have embraced Christianity, though in the Hoim adistrict only 7000, out of a population of 87,000, are in any real touch with Christianity, Anglican or Roman. The account which is given of the converts is not very bright. Immorality is sadly prevalent, and few of the Christian chiefs are moral men, while at many of the country churches the baptized Christians rarely attend the services. This may be due to the service being of a character to suit the unbaptized majority, and consequently offering the Christians but little "food." The African pastor at Kiryandongo, however, is doing a splendid work, the church council at Hoima is keen, and some of the teachers are spiritual men, "quiet, yet strong where principle is at stake." An interesting development of the year was the introduction of missionary boxes at Masindi; the proceeds were devoted to the work in the district, but the holders have agreed that in 1915 they shall be given to work outside Bunyoro. Between £30 and £40 was raised in the Hoima district by the Builders' Band, which has 700 names on its roll. A training class for women teachers is held at Hoima, and the boys of the high school at that station are keen. The foundation stone of a new school, to be called the "Kabarega School" in memory of a former king, was laid at Masindi by the Governor; of the Rs 10,000 required for the building, Rs 6000 has been contributed by the king and chiefs and European friends, the greater part of the amount by the Africans.

Bunyoro

Missionary boxes introduced

In the Acholi Country, where work was resumed early in 1913, extension was the order of the day. On all sides requests were made for teachers, and six new centres were opened in the Kitgum district, which lies forty miles north-east of Gulu, the chief station. A high school for the sons of chiefs was established, and by the end of the year had thirty-five boys in residence, each of whom pays a fee of Rs 15 per annum. Six of the lads received baptism, and many asked for teachers to take back with them to their villages. Most of those baptized in the district are young men, and eight of the last ten converts have consented to go out as teachers. One of the most cheering features of the work is the good influence exercised by the converts who were baptized during the years 1904–7 when Patigo, a station in the neighbourhood, was occupied. The first baptized convert is now a valued teacher, and others, sons of chiefs, who for a time were teachers, are now ruling in their fathers' places.

Good influence of African Christians

IV. EASTERN PROVINCE

Pastoral work

In the country of Busoga, which adjoins the Nile, the growth of the Church has been very rapid, and during the four years 1909–13 the number of adherents quadrupled, and that of African teachers increased from 130 to 343. Great improvement was shown in 1914 by the church committees, which displayed higher business capacity, and in many of the converts the missionaries were thankful to be able to trace signs of a deepening of the spiritual life.[1] Polygamy, however, is a real stumblingblock, while some of the baptized men take heathen wives, for the simple reason that there are no Christian girls available. At Nabumale, in Bukedi, as intimated in last year's Report,[2] the difficulty lies in the other direction, and two of the baptized girls contracted a heathen marriage during the year.

Marriages with non-Christians

Evangelistic work

Few of the older people embrace Christianity

Both in Busoga and Bukedi there are many inquirers, but the work among the women made little advance, and comparatively few of the older people have embraced Christianity. One special difficulty exists at Nabumale through the variety of tribes found in the district, with which that formerly worked from Mbale has been amalgamated. The district now comprises six administrative countries, in which different languages are spoken, and different customs prevail. The Sacraments are administered and business transacted at a central church at least once every three months, and the Luganda Prayer Book is used everywhere except in South Bugisu, but it is very doubtful whether it is understood.

Training work discontinued

The training of men agents was in suspense for most of the year owing to the lack of European missionaries to devote themselves to it. The Training College at Ng'ora was closed, the class for teachers at Kamuli was disbanded, and the normal school at Mbale was not reopened. In the spring the first Teso converts to be trained passed out from the college, three of them having gained certificates. High Schools for sons of chiefs, at which fees are charged, were carried on at Kamuli (the Balangira School), Ng'ora, and Mbale, but the last named is to be transferred to Nabumale in consequence of the lack of water at the present site. The Ng'ora school, with 145 boys, is entirely self-supporting through the profit made by the school forge and carpenter's shop, and from the cultivation of the school estate consisting of 200 acres. The boys did well in examination, and many of them read for baptism. In the Industrial School at Iganga, which is under the Busoga Church, carpentry is taught, and the boys were fully occupied in making church furniture for different stations in Buganda, Busoga, and Bukedi. The insufficiency of the supply of tools alone prevents the growth of the institution. The Women's Training Class at Kamuli had three members, and a normal class for girls was conducted at Iganga. The number of pupils in the Boarding School for Girls, the daughters of chiefs, at Iganga rose during the year from thirty-three to fifty-two, and a great improvement was seen in their conduct. Two of the girls received baptism, as did sixteen of those attending the day school at Kamuli. At both schools some industrial teaching is given, and at Kamuli the children contributed enough to pay the salaries of the African teachers and helpers working at the school.

Female education

Dispensary work is carried on at Iganga, Kamuli, and Nabumale, and at Iganga 210 in-patients were received, while the receipts increased from Rs 1171 to Rs 1332. Many of the patients, both there and at Nabumale, were Indians. It was proposed to establish a mission hospital at Ng'ora, and a doctor was appointed to the work, but he volunteered for service in connexion with the war, and the scheme had to be postponed.

Medical work

V. KAVIRONDO

More than one hundred inquirers were enrolled at Kisumu, near Port Florence, during the five months following the outbreak of war, and in every respect the work in the district went steadily forward. The Sunday services, six in number and held in three different languages, English, Luganda, and Kavirondo, were well attended, though the congregations were not quite as large as in 1913 in consequence of the demand for labour. Nearly fifty boys were in training as bricklayers or joiners at the industrial school at Maseno, and all of them passed the government examination. Twenty of the lads left, having finished their three years' course, some of them taking posts as carpenters on the steamers plying on the Victoria Lake. A girls' school, with an attendance of about forty, has been established at the station. At Butere, ten miles from the postal town of Mumia's, the head-quarters of work among the Bahanga tribe of the Bantu-speaking Kavirondo, the development of the Mission makes itinerations increasingly difficult to compass. As many as 300 persons are sometimes present at the

Kisumu

Sunday morning service. At one time the attendance was affected by a small market, opened rather near the church, which developed into a sort of fair on Sundays, and drew away some of the adherents. In order to counteract this tendency the members of the congregation were sometimes asked to assemble earlier than usual, and then go in procession to the cross roads near the fair for a preliminary open-air service, at which an invitation was given to all present to accompany the procession when it reformed and returned to the church. The congregation at Namasoli, five miles from Butere, where work is carried on by an honorary teacher, at times numbered 350 persons, necessitating a new building in which to hold the services, since the old one would only accommodate about seventy-five people. Among the adherents there was "manifest progress in the practice of Christianity." Some of them evidently realized more than before the privilege of prayer, and many persevered in attendance at school and classes, though they saw their friends go off to all parts of Africa in response to the demand for labourers, so as to amass rupees where wages were high.

MOHAMMEDAN LANDS

The Church Missionary Society is one of the few missionary societies which pay special attention to work among Mohammedans, the number of whom is estimated at 201,297,000. Work among them is attended everywhere, even in countries where Christian governments are supreme, with peculiar difficulties and often with vexatious restrictions; and these are intensified in lands under Mohammedan rule, where the law of Islam, which enacts death as the penalty for forsaking that faith for another, is still in some degree in force, notwithstanding proclamations of religious liberty. The British occupation of Egypt renders the position of converts from Islam in that land less perilous than in Persia and in lands under Turkish government, where a Mohammedan can only become a Christian at the imminent risk of liberty and life.

The C.M.S. has considerable work among Mohammedans in West and East Africa, India, and Ceylon, as well as in those countries which are included under the title "Mohammedan Lands."

"The Turkish Empire has committed suicide"

"THE Turkish Empire has committed suicide"—such were the words of the British Prime Minister in November, 1914, when he announced the open rupture between the Porte and the Allies. As early as in September the representatives of the Powers at Constantinople were informed by the Government that the Porte had to abolish the judicial and financial capitulations, in order to assure judicial, economic, and fiscal liberty of action, but that it entertained no unfriendly intention; but its professions were belied by one futile outrage after another, and in November the Allies "were compelled to yield to the logic of facts and to recognize Turkey as an open enemy." At the meeting at the Guildhall, at which Mr. Asquith used the above words, he added, "It is the Ottoman Government and not we who have rung the death-knell of Ottoman dominion, not only in Europe but in Asia. With their disappearance will disappear, as I hope and believe, the blight which for generations past has withered some of the fairest regions of the earth." Events soon occurred which appear to herald that consummation. Turkey's proclamation of a jihad, or religious war, in November, met with practically no response. The Grand Sheikh of the Senussi sect, the most uncompromising and the most powerful of all the religious orders of Islam,[1] intimated that Turkey's actions were no concern of his, and that he wished to continue to live on the same friendly terms with Egypt as had subsisted in the past; and other representative notables in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, to the number of more than one hundred, spontaneously expressed their loyalty and devotion to the British Government.[2] The armies of the Turks have not met with much more success up to the present than their religious fulminations. Attacks on the Russians in the Caucasus, and on the British at the Suez Canal, have been repulsed; Turkey has lost some territory at the head of the Persian Gulf; a number of her forts in the Dardanelles have been destroyed. Moreover, she has been deprived of the suzerainty of Egypt, for on December 17 it was announced that that country had been constituted a British protectorate. Even before the present conflict began Turkey's dominion was on the wane. Since the beginning of the war with Italy the Porte had lost 637,950 square miles of territory and 7,400,000 subjects, and the Moslems under its rule only numbered 13,279,000 as compared with 90,000,000 under British rule and 77,000,000 under other Christian Governments.[1] It seems, indeed, as though "the hour has struck on the great clock of destiny for settling accounts with the Turks."[2]

Turkey's loss of empire

There are several symptoms that a change is in progress. A well-known Egyptian journalist, who until recently was editor of the leading Moslem newspaper of Egypt, claims that that country is the geographical, linguistic, educational, and religious centre of Islam, and that Cairo, "the city of cities of Islam," is marked out by its position between the holy places of Arabia and Constantinople as the ideal centre of the Caliphate. Again, in the Moslem world there is a growing spirit of unrest and dissatisfaction with the condition of Islam, as well as in the Turkish Empire with the dominion of the Turks. Canon R. Sterling writes:—

Dissatisfaction with Islam

> The profession of Mohammedanism is seen to be unaccompanied by any corresponding elevation of morals. Morality is, in fact, divorced from religion. The cause is not far to seek. The creed of Islam demands of its followers the fulfilment of certain outward observances, and upon their due performance rest their claims to be considered true Moslems. The heart is the seat of moral evil, and the well-spring of action is left untouched, and herein lies the characteristic difference between the religion of Mohammed and that of Christ. It is the "doing" rather than the "being" which to them is the criterion of faith. Curiously enough this failure of the religion to ennoble the character and to foster the growth of elementary virtues is regarded by them as due to the lack of education rather than to the defects inherent to the religion itself. Education, therefore, has come to be regarded as the panacea for all existing evils. It is quite pathetic to listen to the lamentations of thinking Mohammedans. The absence of truth and justice and the prevalence of vice constitute for them a mystery which it is difficult to solve.

Evils of Mohammedanism

It is well that there should be dissatisfaction with the religion of Mohammed. Its sensuality; the position it assigns to women as the "object of man's sensual pleasures, a toy, as it were, with which he plays, whenever and however he pleases"; the blight it imposes on childhood; the bondage to evil spirits which prevails among its followers—it is difficult to understand how a religion which leads to such results can be held by thinking men.[1]

Islam a blight on childhood

For several years it has been the custom to mention in this chapter of the Report, without giving any clue as to the stations where they came forward, inquirers and converts in Palestine, Turkish Arabia, and Persia. This has been done because of the danger involved to those who forsake Islam in lands under Moslem rule. The same course is adopted this year, but there is ground for hope that in future it will be safe to mention in the chapters which deal with these Missions cases in which men and women are won for Christ.

Converts

The converts baptized in 1914 included an old man, 70 years of age, and young boy, servants in a mission hospital; another boy; and several women. One of the last named was the fruit of a class held once a week in a convert's house; three others were led to Christ at evangelistic meetings conducted by a woman missionary; a fifth is a village woman, who keeps a little school, and has lost several of her pupils because she has discontinued teaching the Koran. Another woman, who either has been baptized or is under instruction for baptism, it is not quite clear which, is a servant, and is helping her young mistress, who has several times been an in-patient at a mission hospital, into the light.

Fruit of evangelistic meetings

Inquirers

Among those under preparation for baptism, or who have declared in private their conviction of the truth of Christianity, or who appear disposed to accept Christ as their Saviour, may be mentioned a young man of good birth, a temporary teacher in a mission school, whose baptism had to be deferred because of the war; another man who openly confessed Christ in spite of some persecution; a patient in a mission hospital, who eventually died at his home, and of whom a missionary says, "that he was an out-and-out Christian I have no doubt"; and a teacher in a mission boys' school. In a mission hospital in a certain town several men and women died during the year confessing their faith in Christ, while other patients were earnest in their search for the truth; and at another station some children passed away, avowing that they loved the Saviour, and a number of women left the hospital believing in the Lord Jesus, but afraid to confess Him openly. Three of the elder day scholars and some of the boarders in a mission school for girls were under definite instruction, and two women who conduct private schools introduced the Gospel among their pupils; while in the same place a lady of influence was contemplating baptism, and sought to win for Christ her niece and a friend. From another place several inquirers are reported —a former hospital patient, who, however, has some difficulty in accepting Christ's divinity, the wife of a Christian servant, and an educated woman whose son had been in hospital. Moreover, two akhunds in the town, that is men whose duty it is to mount the pulpits in the public squares and recite the praises of their imams, Hasan and Husein, began to visit the mission house for teaching on Sundays, then asked to be taught on Fridays also, and eventually confessed that they had ceased to believe the ideas among Moslems concerning the imams, and would no longer continue the recitations. Several men, one of whom had been greatly influenced by a dream, were being taught more or less regularly at X——. Among other inquirers were a young man, who has openly avowed to his relatives that he is a Christian; a man won by the patience under persecution of his sister who had become a Christian; another man, who was led to inquire by reading a book belonging to a convert of some years ago, which he rescued when it was being publicly burned in the market place; a well-to-do woman who when she was first admitted to a mission hospital refused to listen to the Gospel, but who before long not only wished to have the Bible read to her, but was continually reading it for herself, and who after her recovery welcomed the missionaries to her house "as messengers of the Gospel"; and a village woman who asked to be taught to pray, and strenuously affirmed her belief in Jesus Christ, whether or no a neighbour was listening. The case of another woman, who perhaps cannot quite be regarded as an inquirer, is thus described:—

Akhunds ask for teaching about Christ

Won by a sister's patience under persecution

> Among the patients who came into the hospital was the wife of a very bigoted Moslem gentleman; she is his sixth wife, all the others having been divorced. She needed an operation but was afraid she would die under the anæsthetic; we tried to reassure her, telling her to look to Christ, but she would not allow us to speak of Him. However, after the operation a great change came over her and she was quite ready to listen, but could not see the need of the death of Christ. She also said, "Tell me, what sins do I commit? my heart is as white as milk, I am not like the common people, I do not steal, or kill, or do anything wicked!" She did not consider that lying was a sin, and when shown what a great sin it is in God's sight she declared that she had never told a lie in her life. She was taught daily while in the hospital, and was much impressed; and her whole family, including her husband and step-daughters, became quite different in their attitude towards the Gospel.

"My heart is as white as milk"

Instances such as these give abundant cause to all who seek the extension of the Kingdom of Christ to thank God and take courage.

EGYPT AND THE SUDAN MISSIONS

PAST HISTORY

The original object of the C.M.S. Missions formerly grouped under the heading of the "Mediterranean Mission," which were begun at Malta in 1815, at the close of the great war, and were afterwards extended to Egypt, Abyssinia, Greece, Turkey, Asia Minor, and Palestine, was twofold: first, to revive the Eastern Churches; and, second, through them to evangelize the Mohammedans. Some very able and devoted missionaries were employed in this work—Jowett, Gobat, Krapf, Pfander, Koelle, etc. But the hopes of the founders of the Society were not fulfilled. Oriental Christendom manifested no readiness to be quickened into life by emissaries from the West; and Moslem fanaticism, which barely tolerated Greek and Armenian Christianity, utterly repudiated the Gospel when presented in a pure form.

The Society formerly had a Mission in Egypt, as part of its scheme for the revival of the Eastern Churches. Many of the Coptic clergy and one bishop were trained in the C.M.S. seminary at Cairo; but the visible results were small, and the work was discontinued in 1862. In 1882, in response to the appeals of the late Miss Whately and in consequence of the British occupation of Egypt, the Rev. F. A. Klein, formerly of Jerusalem, was sent to Cairo to begin a new Mission among the Mohammedans. A medical mission was opened in 1889, and women were added to the staff in the following year. Helouan was occupied in 1903, Menouf and Shubra Zanga in 1910, and Ashmoun in 1912. After Gordon's death at Khartoum in 1885 a Gordon Memorial Fund was opened, and soon after the defeat of the Khalifa's forces Omdurman (1899) and Khartoum (1900) were occupied, under some restrictions, however, as to evangelistic efforts. Atbara was occupied in 1908. In 1905 the Society was invited by Lord Cromer and the Sirdar to commence work in the southern part of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, and Malek was occupied in the following year; Lau in 1912; and Yambio in 1913.

Egypt is included in the jurisdiction of the Right Rev. R. MacInnes, the Anglican Bishop in Jerusalem. An assistant bishop, the Right Rev. Ll. H. Gwynne, consecrated in 1908, resides at Khartoum. Both of these bishops were C.M.S. missionaries previous to their consecration.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

I. The Society occupies six stations in Egypt proper (see Map 7, Section I). A training class, a boarding school, and two day schools for girls are maintained at Cairo; a school for boys, with a hostel attached, at Old Cairo; and a school for high-class girls at Helouan. There is also a book depôt at Cairo, and a fortnightly magazine, "Orient and Occident," is published. Evangelistic meetings are held for sheikhs, and students, and others. Medical work is carried on at hospitals for men and for women and children at Old Cairo. Work among the fellahin is maintained at Menouf, Ashmoun, and Shubra Zanga.

II. In the Sudan (see Map 7, Section II), the sphere of the operations of the Gordon Memorial Mission, the Society has girls' schools at Khartoum, Omdurman, and Atbara, and a medical mission at Omdurman. Work has also been begun among the Jieng and Azandi, pagan tribes, 1000 miles farther up the Nile.

There are 12 clergymen, 8 laymen, 10 missionaries' wives and 23 other women missionaries engaged in the Missions; 4 of these are doctors and 5 are nurses. There are also 52 native Christian lay agents.

Canon MacInnes appointed Bishop in Jerusalem

THERE are many references in the annual letters from the Egypt Mission to the loss sustained by it through the appointment of Canon R. MacInnes as Bishop in Jerusalem. He joined the Mission in 1899, and became secretary for the work in Egypt and the Northern Sudan on the death of the Rev. F. F. Adeney in 1904. Owing to the war Bishop MacInnes continues for the present to live at Cairo, and he will of course still be connected closely with the work in the Mission, since Egypt is included in his jurisdiction. The Rev. W. H. T. Gairdner, who has been appointed an honorary canon of St. George's Cathedral, Jerusalem, has succeeded him in the secretariat.

Language school

Mr. H. Lamb and Mr. G. P. Thomas have not renewed their agreements which expired in 1914.

A good deal of Mr. Gairdner's time in 1914 was taken up with organizing the work of the Cairo study centre for Arabic and Islam; he is specially responsible for the studies of missionary recruits in the Arabic language. The Rev. R. F. McNeile, in addition to lecturing on the history and practice of Islam, has set on foot a class for the study of the Koran among the missionaries who had been forced by the war to leave Palestine and Syria.

Literary work

Mr. Gairdner and Mr. McNeile continued to edit "Orient and Occident," and the former was also engaged in the preparation of sundry textbooks for use at the study centre. The Rev. A. Shaw translated St. Luke's Gospel into Bor Jieng, and the Rev. C. A. Lea-Wilson rendered St. Mark's Gospel into Cheech Jieng. The Rev. E. C. Gore translated the first nine chapters of St. Mark's Gospel, and several prayers into Azandi, and the Rev. W. Haddow compiled a primer in that language. Mr. Gore says that he found it impossible to translate St. Mark ii. 19, 20, and one or two other verses, since the idea of marriage, in the Bible sense of the word, is wholly absent among the Azandi.

I. EGYPT MISSION

Pastoral work

THE little Church in Egypt made some advance in the matter of self-support and self-government, and the monthly subscriptions of Orientals amounted to £45. The missionaries, however, had a sad trial in the perversion of two of the converts, people who had even taken part in evangelistic work; while for a time anxiety was felt concerning the spiritual well-being of others. Happily before the end of the year a better spirit asserted itself.

Evangelistic work

The cases of backsliding which have been referred to were largely due to very definite and persistent efforts early in 1914 to seduce all converts from Islam. They were subjected to increasing and irritating persecution, and all sorts of pitfalls were placed in their path. This was part of what Mr. Gairdner describes as "the most threatening Moslem movement" he has ever seen. He writes:—

Threatening Moslem movement

> It was supported by the highest in the land and by the official power of El Azhar. It was highly organized, and it stuck at nothing. One of its aims was to organize meetings all over Egypt against Christian missions; another to spread anti-Christian and anti-missionary literature broadcast; a third to seduce all Moslem converts. The latter were approached individually and worked upon by every possible argument and inducement.

The opposition showed itself in many ways and at many places. Christian missions were attacked in the newspapers; the boys attending the C.M.S. school at Old Cairo were waylaid in the streets by emissaries of El Azhar, who filled their minds with arguments against Christianity, and placed tracts in their hands; and the homes of the pupils at the girls' school at Cairo were visited so that their parents might be induced to withdraw them. At Shubra Zanga a sheikh one day entered the school and drove out his little half-sisters, knocking them down; the missionaries were boycotted; curses were written on their door; and mud was thrown at them in the streets. And at Menouf bigotry and fanaticism did their best to put a stop to the work, and it was found wise not to attempt to gather many men together for meetings, but to be satisfied with individual dealing. The outbreak of war brought about a change. It served to divert the minds of the people. An evident desire to appear friendly to the English sprang up; and though, doubtless, in many cases this was lacking in sincerity, yet the words of an old sheikh may have expressed the feelings of many: "We remember Turkish rule in Egypt, and we do not want to have it again." Not only did the agitation come to an end; it also failed, in some cases at all events, to produce the desired effect. It even aroused a certain amount of interest in Christianity, while the work among individuals, with which the catechists were perforce obliged to be content, produced more and better results than efforts to reach numbers of people at a time. The evangelistic meetings at Cairo were continued; Moslem women were visited, both in the city and in the villages, and "At Homes" were held for them; and lantern meetings were carried on in the Delta in spite of opposition. Some inquirers were under instruction at Cairo, and a good many requests for teaching and for baptism were received just after war broke out, due possibly to an expectation of trouble and scarcity, and a feeling that in such an event connexion with the English Church would prove advantageous. Other inquirers, several of them disappointing, came forward at Menouf, and at Shubra Zanga a servant of the missionaries declared his desire to become a Christian. He was forthwith taken before a gathering of sheikhs, beaten, kicked, and spat upon; then a false accusation was brought against him, and he was thrown into prison, where he remained for five weeks, until it was clear that there was no proof of the charge preferred against him. For a long time he stood firm, but at length he was persuaded to withdraw his name from the list of candidates for baptism and pretend to be a Mohammedan. Before the end of the year, however, he applied for readmission as a catechumen. Two persons received baptism at Cairo.

but good in quality. In spite of the opposition which has been described the classes in the Boys' School at Old Cairo remained full, while eight out of the eleven who sat for the government certificate examination were successful—a better result than ever before attained. The attendance at the only other boys' school in the Mission, that at Menouf, fell off slightly. An improvement was seen in the conduct and work of the members of the Training Class which is held at the Girls' Boarding School at Cairo, but most of them are young. There is an English School at Helouan, sixteen miles south of Cairo, which was well attended during the early part of 1914. Now and again some feeling against the Bible teaching was shown, and the girls objected to answer Scripture questions, but with the exercise of a little tact the difficulty was overcome. Most of the other girls' schools report a decrease in the number of pupils, due in many cases to the reduction in the price of cotton owing to the war, which involved the farmers in financial straits.

Feeling against Bible teaching

Medical work

For the same reason the number of ankylostomiasis patients at the Old Cairo hospitals fell off greatly, and was reduced almost to vanishing point, though at one time nearly 600 men and 250 women were under treatment. Some of these patients often displayed hostility to the teaching at first, but in process of time their attitude improved and Christian instruction came to be valued; one patient indeed remarked that the teaching they received was alone worth the money they paid. One of those whose baptism has been referred to was won at the hospital, and another man, a hospital servant, became an inquirer. The dispensary work at Ashmoun was extended to Hamoul, a village distant one hour by rail, and until the outbreak of war the attendances registered were considerably in advance of those in 1913. Some people at Shubra Zanga asked for treatment for their maladies, and it is hoped shortly to open a dispensary there for women and children.

II. ANGLO-EGYPTIAN SUDAN (GORDON MEMORIAL) MISSION

1. NORTHERN SUDAN

Educational work

THE C.M.S. has three schools—all for girls—in the Northern Sudan, and a fourth is asked for by the people of El Obeid, the chief town of the desert province of that name between the Nile and Darfur westwards. The school at Khartoum did well in examinations, and at Omdurman there was encouragement in the good attendance, often exceeding one hundred. The pupils in the latter school are of many nationalities. Some are Copts, others Jewesses, others Armenians, Syrians, or Greeks, but the majority are the daughters of Sudanese, who are beginning to appreciate the advantages of education for their girls. At Atbara, likewise, many new Sudanese pupils were admitted. A rival Moslem school was opened in March with the avowed object of ruining the mission school, but it failed to affect the number of C.M.S. pupils at all seriously, and within a month or two quarrels broke out among the committee of the Moslem institution.

Medical work

The first part of a new hospital at Omdurman was opened in March, 1914, and within six months the men's beds were full, while the dispensaries attracted many patients. The work is often most trying, owing to the intense heat, the thermometer sometimes standing at 115° in the shade. The people were warned in the mosque and elsewhere against the teaching in the hospital, and one man is reported to have said to some of the patients, "You know you may not have the least intention now of becoming Christians, but in a few years' time you will suddenly find that you believe what the doctor says, and have become Christians without knowing it." The daily Bible class for the hospital boys had to be given up, but some of the men patients were evidently interested in the Bible, and a woman who attended the dispensary felt "the teaching was getting a hold upon her heart." [1]

Work in intense heat

Evangelistic work

A certain amount of visiting was accomplished among the Sudanese women, some showing a great contempt for the Gospel and others hearing it gladly. Something was done, too, to reach the Coptic women, many of whom have lived so long at Omdurman that they have adopted some Moslem customs.

2. SOUTHERN SUDAN

At two of the stations in the Southern Sudan—Malek and Lau—work is carried on among the Jieng,[2] those at Lau belonging to the Cheech Jieng; while at Yambio, the third station, the Azandi are reached.

Work among the Jieng

Two noteworthy events occurred at Malek: the arrival of Mrs. W. H. Scamell, the first woman missionary in the Southern Sudan; and the admission of the first Jieng converts to the catechumenate. For eight years the work had been carried on without apparent fruit, but at the end of May a man named Aruor, about 24 years old, expressed to the missionaries his faith in Christ, telling them, without any apparent emotion, that he had found the Saviour, and that new joy had come into his life.[3] Five others afterwards followed his example and were admitted as catechumens. At Lau, which was not occupied until six years after Malek, matters are naturally less forward. The people are extremely superstitious. They look upon reading and writing as kinds of magic, and will request the workers to write a paper in order that a sick cow may recover, or to look into a book and see whether an enemy is approaching, and so on, and will even ask them to make rain when the efforts of their own rain makers come to nought.[1] Their attitude towards Christianity is in the main one of indifference, rising at times to opposition. Thus, one day when the Rev. C. A. Lea-Wilson was walking with a youth, a woman's voice was heard saying, "Are you wearing clothes? You have no heart," meaning that by working for the missionaries he had severed his connexion with the tribe and had disgraced his clan. But as time passed the demeanour of the people changed, and partly owing to the pinch of famine their bitterness to some extent disappeared. Numbers of men and boys became willing to work, and a few of them were employed to sink a well. When they had reached a depth of thirty-five feet they came upon chalk, and some of the older men advised that operations should be abandoned, as nothing but evil could come from digging through "the dust of dead men." But the boys persevered and found good water at a depth of sixty-five feet. "The water of God! The water of God!" they exclaimed.[2]

Sinking a well

Both at Malek and Lau dispensaries were held, with a daily average of about forty patients. A list of the ills for which the people came to be treated at Malek indicates clearly the wildness of the country, for it includes three cases of injury received from lions, two from leopards, and three from crocodiles.

A wild country

The schools were less successful than the dispensaries, though industrial work in the form of printing and weaving made some progress. Even that, however, and much more ordinary education, suffered from the people's lack of perseverance. Mrs. Scamell set on foot a class for girls at Malek, but after a month they all ceased to attend, as did the seven small girls who were taught to gin and spin cotton by hand.

Work among the Azandi

The Azandi, also known as the Niam Niams, are a small section of a people who extend south and west of Yambio over a large part of the Congo Country. Most of their chiefs belong to another race, the Avangara, believed to be an offshoot of the Fulani stock. The Yambio district contains a population of between 30,000 and 50,000, and every part of it was covered by itinerations in 1914. A school was carried on at the head station, and was attended by several sons of chiefs, and industrial work was also maintained, but the irregularity of the attendance rendered it difficult to make much impression on the people, and their "unbridled immorality" constituted another obstacle. From twenty to thirty patients were treated each day at the dispensary, and a few were received in a small primitive hospital which was built.[3]

PALESTINE MISSION

PAST HISTORY

The C.M.S. commenced work in Palestine in 1851, in response to an invitation given by Bishop Gobat. The following places have been occupied by European labourers: Jerusalem, 1851; Nazareth, 1852; Jaffa and Nablous, 1853; Haifa, 1856; Shefamer, 1871; Salt, 1874; Ramallah, 1877; Gaza, 1878; Ramleh, 1879; El Husn, 1890; Kefr Yasif, 1892; and Bir Zeit, 1894. Medical missions have done much to diminish prejudice. The first (under a native doctor) was set on foot at Salt in 1883. In 1887 the Society began to send unmarried women to this Mission. In 1899 the work of the late Female Education Society at Nazareth, Bethlehem, and Shefamer was taken over by the Society.

The bishopric in Jerusalem was founded in 1841 on the initiative of King Frederick William IV. of Prussia, the arrangement being that England and Prussia, who shared the expense of the see, should alternately nominate its occupant. The first three bishops were Dr. Alexander, Dr. Gobat (1846), previously a C.M.S. missionary, and Dr. Barclay (1879). On the death of the last named in 1881 the German Government failed to nominate a successor, and eventually declined to continue the arrangement. In 1887 the bishopric was revived by Archbishop Benson, the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews and the Church Missionary Society having undertaken to make an annual subscription to the stipend of the see to supplement the endowment, and Dr. Blyth was appointed. He was succeeded in 1914 by Bishop MacInnes.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The C.M.S. worked at six main stations west of the Jordan, namely, Jerusalem, Nazareth, Nablous (the Denis Crofton Mission), Jaffa, Gaza, and Haifa; and at Salt, on the east of the river (see Map 7, Section I).

At each of these stations and at their out-stations day schools are carried on, that at Gaza being attended by some 300 girls. The chief institutions for men and boys are the English College and the Bishop Gobat School at Jerusalem, and a newly instituted training colony for the preparation of native agents at Kefr Yasif; and for girls a training school at Bethlehem, an orphanage at Nazareth, and a boarding school at Ramleh. Jaffa, Nablous, Gaza, and Salt are centres of medical missionary work. Much is done to reach the women by means of visiting them in their homes, both in the towns and villages.

The pastoral work in the Mission is mainly in the hands of the Palestine Church Council, with which 9 native clergymen are connected. The European staff consists of 7 clergymen, 6 laymen, 11 missionaries' wives, and 28 other women missionaries; of these, 6 are doctors and 7 are trained nurses connected with the medical missions. The native Christian lay agents number 118.

Death of Bishop Blyth

Dr. G. F. Popham Blyth, the fourth Bishop of the Church of England in Jerusalem, died in London on 5 November, 1914. He went to India as a chaplain on the ecclesiastical establishment in 1866; in 1879 he was appointed archdeacon and chaplain of the pro-cathedral at Rangoon; and in 1887 came his call to Jerusalem. In the summer of 1914 his approaching retirement, to take effect on October 18, was announced, and he came home in August. The collegiate church of St. George in Jerusalem, and the suffragan bishopric in the Sudan are enduring monuments to his memory. He has been succeeded by the Rev. Canon R. MacInnes who joined the Egypt Mission of the C.M.S. in 1899 as an honorary missionary, and was appointed an honorary canon of St. George's Cathedral, Jerusalem, in 1909. His consecration took place at Westminster Abbey on October 28.[1]

The Committee have accepted the resignation of Miss F. L. A. Roberts, and Dr. J. M. Keith and Mr. J. E. Robinson have not renewed their agreements which expired in 1914.

Preludes to the war

With the possible exception of that in Turkish Arabia, none of the Society's Missions has suffered as much through the war as the Palestine Mission. When hostilities began, the Turkish Government, as is well known, declared itself neutral, but suspicions soon began to be entertained as to its ultimate intentions, which were amply justified by its actions in Palestine. It appears from the reports of the C.M.S. missionaries that as early as May or June sealed orders, to the effect that all able-bodied men were to present themselves for service, were sent to all the villages and towns in Palestine. Some affirm that when war broke out between Great Britain and Germany in August instructions were given that these should be opened. Mobilization at once took place. Nablous was used as a military centre because of its plentiful supply of water, and thousands of soldiers were soon in training there, everything, Miss A. A. M. Bedells[2] says, being "far too precise and orderly for Turkish management." Places familiar through the Bible narratives echoed with the sounds of modern militarism. Nazareth became the head-quarters of 3000 men, and Beersheba, the "well of the oath," the meeting place of Abraham and Abimelech, was made a military rendezvous. The outlook soon became threatening.

Capitulations withdrawn

The Turks withdrew the "capitulations"—that is the treaty rights obtained by foreign countries, by which their subjects were placed under their consular officers and were not amenable to the ordinary Turkish law courts—and took other action hardly consistent with neutrality; while pro-German feeling was conspicuous. Government posters were put in prominent places attributing the war to the perfidy of England, and the most marvellous "news" was circulated.

Wild reports

One Arabic paper described how a Zeppelin had visited Petrograd, and by means of a powerful magnet had drawn up the Czar and taken him captive; then it proceeded to Paris and in like manner took up the President of the French Republic; and then proceeding to Buckingham Palace it caught up King George! Another report of a similar nature was that London was being bombarded from Antwerp by the big guns which had been sprung as a surprise upon the world. The face of the country was transformed. Dr. Ethel

[2] As these pages are passing through the press news is received of the death Miss Bedells on June 2 at Khartoum.

R. Griffiths, of Nablous, furnishes a graphic description of the conditions which prevailed about this time :—

> The land seems given over to the war ; everything is at a standstill. The soldiers have been everywhere looting, and hurriedly travelling up and down the country with apparently no method or reason in their movements. All able-bodied men have been dragged from their homes, the land is neglected, the people terribly taxed, every useful horse, camel, or mule has been commandeered by the Government and used to carry war requisites, ammunition, ambulances, etc. Travelling is impossible, life and property are insecure, and all our work is at a standstill and the workers are scattered.

Under the circumstances it was felt desirable at the end of August to issue instructions that most of the missionaries in the country should return home or go to Egypt. At length, at the beginning of November, Turkey abandoned her pretence of neutrality and entered the arena. The only C.M.S. missionaries then in Palestine were the Rev. H. Sykes, the secretary of the Mission, and the Rev. and Mrs. S. C. Webb, at Jerusalem ; Canon and Mrs. R. Sterling at Gaza ; and Miss E. A. Lawford at Nazareth. For a short time they were held as hostages in case the Allies should bombard any of the open ports, and Dr. Sterling was confined in prison for several days. Eventually, on December 26, owing to the untiring efforts of Dr. Glazebrook, the United States consul at Jerusalem, Mr. Sykes, Canon and Mrs. Sterling, and Mr. and Mrs. Webb were permitted to leave Jaffa for Alexandria, and ultimately returned to this country. Miss Lawford is believed to be still at the Nazareth Orphanage, where a large number of Turkish soldiers are quartered. At first the Protestant Christians were free from molestation, but on Christmas Day, the Rev. B. Musa, the C.M.S. pastor of Jaffa, with the male teachers, were imprisoned, and afterwards they were sent first to Damascus and then to Urfa for internment, presumably as being too pro-English.[1]

Internment of missionaries

Many of the missionaries who have been obliged by force of circumstances to leave Palestine have found spheres of usefulness elsewhere in the mission field or in connexion with the troops. The Rev. J. L. Macintyre, who has been obliged by ill-health to abandon the idea of returning to West Africa, and has been assigned to the Palestine Mission, is working at Old Cairo as a missionary ; Drs. P. W. Brigstocke and Charlotte Purnell are engaged at the Old Cairo hospitals ; Miss J. Wenham is working at Helouan, Miss A. H. McNeile at Cairo, Miss M. Hicks at Menouf, and Miss Bedells and Miss K. M. Elliott at Atbara, in the Sudan. The Rev. J. E. C. Ross is acting chaplain to the troops at Cairo, Miss M. B. McConaghy is working among the Territorials in Egypt, Miss B. E. Smithies is at a diocesan school at Wad Medani, and Miss M. D. Sharp, Miss K. Morris, and Miss E. G. Williams are engaged in Red Cross work. Meanwhile the native clergy and congregations connected with the C.M.S. Palestine Church Council are left to themselves as far as European assistance and supervision are concerned; and it is hoped that, sustained by the prayers of many in their behalf, they will be enabled to rise to the emergency, and that in God's good Providence the work for which they are responsible will not greatly suffer.

Educational work

Training Colony

Bishop Gobat School

Girls' Training School

The number of students at the Training Colony at Kefr Yasif was three; two or three others who had been accepted for training dropped out for various reasons. Both students and teachers were affected by the humid heat of the plains. The Bishop Gobat School at Jerusalem had sixty boys in attendance when it reopened at the end of October after the holidays. Five girls in the Training School at Bethlehem gained their teachers' certificates, and four of them took up posts in the Mission, the fifth getting married immediately for the sake of money. After war broke out, two of the girls went to assist in the mission school at Omdurman, and one of the teachers accepted a post in that at Khartoum. The day schools in Palestine were prosperous until the political troubles began, and in the Nazareth district opened the way to the hearts of the people.

Changed attitude of better class patients

The patients in the mission hospitals were more responsive than usual to the Bible teaching, and in one town the medical work gained for the missionaries an entrance into many large houses which previously had been closed to the Gospel. A marked change took place in the attitude of the better class patients during their stay in hospital. At first they were generally too proud to have anything to do with their poorer companions, but "without exception" they altered before they left, not only offering to make presents to the others, but even asking to be allowed to wait on them—a striking example of the influence of kindness, love, and sympathy. There was a good increase in the number of patients and of visits of out-patients at Nablous, and a new field of work opened up among the women of the wealthier classes; while at Salt there was some development in the medical work among people in their own homes. The dispensary at Lydd, which is superintended by the Jaffa doctors, was well attended; and at El Areesh, a town near the sea shore in the south-west corner of the Sinaitic peninsula, where the Turkish troops concentrated for their advance against the Suez Canal, Dr. Sterling had an average of ninety patients daily during a fortnight which he spent there.[1]

[1] See "M. & T.," April, 1915, pp. 117, ff. A description of dispensary work in Palestine appeared in the "Gl.," Feb., p. 21.

Evangelistic work

Such reports as have been received from the Palestine missionaries indicate that in 1914 the outlook was more hopeful than for many years past. At Salt the work was full of encouragement, and the women's meetings, held in different parts of the town, were often crowded; in the villages in the Nazareth district the doors were open for visiting, and Miss H. M. Wolters was asked again and again why she did not go more frequently; while around Jerusalem and in the neighbourhood of Jaffa the village women welcomed the missionaries, and were ready to listen to their message. On the other hand in the Kefr Yasif district the people were apathetic with respect to religion.

Pastoral work

In the summer of 1913 many of the missionaries banded themselves together on the Mount of Olives to pray at a certain time each week for a revival among the native Christians, and answers to their petitions were seen in some parts of the country. Many of the Christians, as is well known, notably those belonging to the Greek Church, are profoundly ignorant of even the leading truths and facts of Christianity, and are the victims of gross superstition. Miss M. Hicks gives the following examples:—

Ignorant Christians

One day I asked a Greek Christian what she knew about Christmas Day. She replied, "The bells ring more than on any other day." I said, "Have you never heard how Christ was born?" She said, "No"; so I read her the beautiful story. She listened and said, "It is a pretty tale; but we are only cows, we know nothing." One woman, a Greek, said, "Tell me, is it true that I must not drink in the evening because my two little boys have just died, and if I drink they will be driven back from the water of life in Paradise, and told 'Your mother drank, so there is no water for you'?" I read to her about heaven, and she was comforted. Again, I noticed an iron ring on a woman's neck and asked her why she wore it. She said, "I had six girls and no son, so I went to a wise woman, and she told me to get a horse-shoe from a thorough-bred horse, and to have it beaten out on Friday at noon and then wear it night and day." I said, "Well, and did you have sons?" "Oh yes," she said; "three." I said, "Does your priest approve of such a thing?" She said, "I don't know." I talked to her for a long time, but, alas, without avail; she only said, "I will leave off wearing the necklet when my sons grow up."

Sunday-school work was carried on with success at Jaffa, where no girl was absent on more than one Sunday in the year, and also at Haifa, where there was an average attendance of nearly fifty. The "Lighthouse Band" at that station had two branches, one for children and the other for adults; the latter, by means of needlework, raised a sum of £2 10*s*., which was sent to the Girls' Boarding School at Foochow.

TURKISH ARABIA MISSION

Baghdad, which is in the Turkish Empire, is in the immediate neighbourhood of the sacred places of the Shiah Mohammedans. Thousands of pilgrims flock to it from all parts of Persia, and in order to reach them the city was occupied by a C.M.S. missionary in 1883. A hospital was opened in 1886. In 1898 the work, previously carried on in connexion with that in Persia, was constituted an independent Mission. Three years later Mosul, near the site of ancient Nineveh, was occupied (see Map 7, Section I).

Medical and educational work are carried on at both the above stations. The staff consists of 2 European clergymen, 3 laymen, 4 missionaries' wives, and 5 women missionaries; of these, 5 are doctors and 3 are trained nurses. There are also 22 native Christian lay agents.

THE little staff of C.M.S. missionaries in Turkish Arabia pursued their work without molestation, in spite of determined efforts on the part of the Germans in Baghdad to stir up feeling against the British, until Turkey was led under pressure from Germany to join in the great war. Even then no active hostility was shown by the people of Baghdad, but with the lapse of time an atmosphere of suspicion developed, which prevented effective missionary work. In October, uncertainty as to the course of events led the British Consul, acting under instructions from the Ambassador at Constantinople, to advise that all women and children of British nationality, and men, if possible, should leave the country, and the Rev. and Mrs. P. V. Boyes accordingly left for the Shatt-el-Arab, and eventually proceeded to Western India, where Mr. Boyes took up work at Poona for a short time. Of the other C.M.S. missionaries, Dr. and Mrs. F. Johnson, Dr. G. W. Stanley, Miss E. E. Martin, and Miss F. Gütsell, the two doctors were imprisoned with other male British subjects in the British Residency under armed guard for a fortnight, but the women were not interfered with in any way. In the middle of December, Dr. Stanley was sent to Aleppo, afterwards proceeding to England, but Dr. and Mrs. Johnson and Miss Gütsell remained at Baghdad, and Miss Martin at Mosul. Two months later, however, Dr. Johnson was ordered to quit the Turkish Empire, and his departure necessitated that of the women missionaries also. Dr. Johnson was confined at the Baghdad police station for four days, and for six days in a room at the prison at Aleppo, but in April he and his companions reached England in safety.[1] Some fighting has taken place in the country, and on November 21 British Indian troops occupied Basra, at the head of the Persian Gulf, after signally defeating Turkish forces.

Baghdad

The C.M.S. has two stations in Turkish Arabia. There is important medical work at Baghdad, where a new hospital was being built when war began; by dint of great effort the first section was completed, as far as the exterior was concerned, the roof being put on after the outbreak of war. The mobilization which was in progress for some time before Turkey joined in the conflict diminished the number of patients, for many men were under arms, and the women did not care to present themselves for operation save in very extreme cases.[1] The boys' school, which has about 150 names on its roll, is attended by Christian lads of both oriental and occidental Churches, as well as by Moslems.[2]

Use of St. Paul's Epistles

In dealing with thoughtful Moslems, imperfectly instructed in Christian truth, Dr. Johnson found it a good plan to read with them some of the Epistles of the New Testament. He writes :—

> I would read the whole of one of St. Paul's shorter epistles at one sitting as a sample of an early Christian letter, written by a man once an ardent Jew, and therefore a monotheist. I would take up points from the Acts giving the history and experience of the writer, and so on, working backwards, as it were, to Christ. By this means it dawns on a Moslem inquirer, as perhaps in no other way, how great and unique is the Christ in His majesty, His claims, His ability to meet sinful man in every need of his soul. This method of presenting the Gospel I would commend to missionaries dealing with Moslems privately, especially where the individual is known more or less.

Mosul

At Mosul also, a town with some 100,000 inhabitants, which stands almost on the site of Nineveh, both educational and medical work are carried on. The latter has been greatly handicapped by the frequent transference of the doctor to Baghdad, but during the early part of the year the boys' school was so full that some lads had to be refused admission, and even after the war began the work both there and in the girls' school was continued.[3]

PERSIA MISSION

PAST HISTORY

Persia, though one of the youngest of the C.M.S. Missions, was among the first countries thought of by the Committee, and was mentioned in each of the two earliest Annual Reports. Henry Martyn stayed ten months in the country in 1811. Since 1834 an American Mission has laboured with much blessing among the Nestorian Christians, and latterly among Mohammedans also, in northern and western Persia. The Archbishop of Canterbury's Assyrian Mission also works partly within the Persian Kingdom. In 1869 the Rev. R. Bruce, of the C.M.S., visited Persia on his way back to India, and, finding the Mohammedans of Ispahan and its neighbourhood not unwilling to discuss religious subjects, he took up his abode at Julfa, and gathered round him some few Moslems and a considerable number of Armenian Christians who were dissatisfied with their own corrupt form of worship. He also opened schools, etc. In 1875 the Society decided to carry on his work, and Persia became one of its Missions. A medical missionary was sent out in 1879, and women were added to the staff in 1891. Kerman was occupied in 1897; Yezd in 1898; and Shiraz (now closed owing to shortage of workers) in 1900.

Persia was under the episcopal jurisdiction of the Bishop of London (the late Bishop E. C. Stuart for several years taking confirmations in his behalf) until 1912, when a see was formed for the country, to which the Rev. C. H. Stileman, formerly a C.M.S. missionary, was consecrated.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The four stations in the Mission (for Ispahan and Julfa, its suburb, may be regarded as one) are widely separated from each other, Ispahan being 200 miles from Yezd; Yezd 220 miles from Kerman; and Shiraz (at present unoccupied) about 320 miles from Ispahan and 250 miles from each of the other stations (see Plate 7, Section I). The isolation of the stations is enhanced by travelling being both slow and dangerous, owing to the indifferent roads and to the country being infested with robbers.

Much of the work centres round the men's and women's hospitals at Ispahan, Yezd, and Kerman. There are schools for Persian boys at Ispahan (Stuart Memorial School), Kerman, and Yezd; for Persian girls at Ispahan (with a normal class); for Armenian boys and girls at Julfa; and for Parsi girls at Yezd. Women missionaries labour among the hospital patients and others, and during the holidays a little evangelistic work is accomplished in the villages.

The staff of the Mission consists, besides Bishop Stileman, of 7 European clergymen, 7 laymen, 11 missionaries' wives, and 21 single women; 10 of the above are doctors and 6 are trained nurses. The native Christian lay agents number 44.

The war

THE war has not interfered with the work of the Mission to any great extent. Hardly any military operations have taken place in the C.M.S. sphere in Persia, save at Ahwaz, south-west of Shuster, in the province of Khuzistan, where the pipe line of the Anglo-Persian Oil Company was cut; but early in 1915 Tabriz, the second city in the kingdom, was occupied by an advanced guard of Turkish troops, who, however, were expelled a few weeks later by the Russians. The latter are not popular in the country, and therefore the sympathies of the people are to some extent with the Germans, but the English are regarded with esteem, and few signs of an anti-missionary spirit have appeared. Some difficulty was experienced in getting missionaries into the country in consequence of the closing of the northern routes, and the workers were exposed to caustic remarks about Christians destroying Christians, but in no other respect did they meet with any material hindrance because of hostilities.

Deaths of Dr. Bruce,

The Rev. Dr. Robert Bruce, the founder of the Mission, died at Littledean on 6 March, 1915. A graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, he sailed under the C.M.S. for the Punjab in 1858, first being stationed at Amritsar, but after a few years accompanying the Rev. T. Valpy French to begin work in the Derajat. He came home on furlough in 1868, and in the following year left again for India, purposing, however, to spend some months in Persia in language study. He took up his abode at Julfa, where circumstances led him to prolong his residence until 1875, when he was summoned home by the Committee, whom he persuaded to adopt Persia as a mission field.[1] He translated both the Bible and the Prayer Book into Persian. He retired at the end of 1894, and after a short period of work on the special deputation staff of the C.M.S., he became successively vicar of St. Nicholas's, Durham, and rector of Littledean, in the diocese of Gloucester.[2]

Miss M. R. S. Bird,

The Mission has sustained a heavy loss by the death at Kerman on 15 August, 1914, of Miss M. R. S. Bird, who for some years was closely associated with Dr. Bruce. She was a granddaughter of Robert Merttens Bird, the great Indian administrator, and also of the Rev. David Brown, chaplain of Calcutta, and closely related to the families of William Wilberforce and Archbishop Sumner. She joined the Mission in 1891, and having received a partial medical training she opened a small dispensary at Ispahan, through which she exercised a remarkable influence. In 1903 she felt it her duty to leave the Mission temporarily in order to minister to the declining years of her aged mother; but in 1911 Miss Bird was free to go back to Persia, and there, though under widely different circumstances, she resumed her truly apostolic labours. The cause of her death was typhoid fever, contracted by nursing some Swedish officers stricken with the disease.[3]

and Miss M. H. Carrick

The Mission has also lost Miss M. H. Carrick, a trained nurse, who died at Yezd on 3 April, 1915, after an operation for appendicitis. She joined the Mission in 1910.

Literary work

The Rev. W. A. Rice was engaged in translating into English a book called "Religious Tenets of the Shiahs," and in the preparation of a syllabus of hospital readings.

Evangelistic work

There are four stations in the Mission, regarding Ispahan and Julfa, its suburb, as one. Of these Shiraz has been unoccupied for some years, but requests have been received from the British Consul General in the town, the manager of the Imperial Bank of Persia, and a general in the Persian army, that the station should be re-opened. No two of the three towns which are occupied are separated from one another by less than 200 miles, and the conditions under which work is carried on at them differ widely. At Ispahan the outlook is bright and there are indications of a large ingathering. The average attendance at the Persian services on Sundays exceeds one hundred, and on special occasions many more are present; on Easter Day, 1914, there were 628 Persians in church, besides thirty at an overflow service; and on Christmas Day more than 780 men and women attended, and an overflow service was held for 180 women, for whom there was no room in the church. Evangelistic meetings for women gain an attendance of between thirty and seventy, rising to 150 when lantern slides are shown, while openings are on the increase for visiting the people, both rich and poor, in their homes. "It is no longer units," a missionary writes, "that are confessing Christ as Son of God and Saviour of the world, but friends and families and households. There is no longer the old terror of confession, but a certain boldness in letting relatives know of their change of heart and faith. There is no longer need for secret baptism, but a healthy confession of faith in the church, in front of converts and inquirers, and sometimes of their own Mohammedan relatives." Itinerations revealed open doors in the villages as well as in Ispahan itself. There is an out-station at Najifabad, twenty miles from Ispahan, where an Armenian worker is in charge, and where forty-two persons gathered at the Persian service when Bishop Stileman (who has been obliged to come home on account of ill-health) was present; and good opportunities were found at Talkhooni and another village in the Linjan district which is said to contain nearly 400 villages in all. During an itineration to Varzaneh, in another district, the Rev. S. H. Biddlecombe found that the medical work had prepared the way for active evangelism; he was welcomed everywhere, Bibles and Scripture portions were bought freely, and several men were met with who had almost embraced Christianity through a study of the Gospels. The spirit of inquiry which characterizes the Mohammedans of Ispahan is not found in anything approaching the same measure among the people of Yezd. Some young Persians and Parsis who attend a Bible class held in that town are keen, one of them even asking whether they might not meet twice a week, and when visiting, especially among the poor, the missionaries find it easy to read the Gospel; but Bahaism, which has made many converts from both Islam and Zoroastrianism, is proving a hindrance to the spread of Christianity. Bishop Stileman writes :—

> Some inquirers who otherwise would, humanly speaking, come out of the darkness of Islam into the marvellous light of Christ, are content to come out only into the twilight of the Bahai faith, and there they seem to entrench themselves, and to be less easy to move than if they had remaine Mohammedans. Much prayer is needed that this movement, which at one time seemed likely to provide a half-way house for Moslems on their way from Islam to Christ, may not erect fresh barriers to keep the Persians from Him.[1]

Kerman

Friendly relations were cultivated at Kerman with several mujtahids and others, some of whom seemed to be intellectually convinced of the truth of Christianity, and a remarkably successful and well-attended "At Home" for Persian ladies was held in the autumn of 1913. Visits were also paid to some gipsies who pitched their tents just outside Kerman,[2] and to Khabis, a town in the district, where many people heard the Gospel, though only a few showed any real interest in it.

Medical work

The medical work suffered through the depletion of the staff, owing to furloughs, etc., and the dispensaries at Sehdeh and Jubareh, which are worked from Ispahan, had to be closed in the summer, though the latter was reopened later, while the men's hospital at Yezd was left for a time without a doctor. The number of patients, both men and women, at Ispahan was large, and in May and June nearly 300 visits of out-patients were recorded at the women's dispensary in a single day—a contrast to the time when the women had to clamber over the roofs of the houses in order to reach Miss Bird undetected by spies; at Yezd, too, there was more work among the richer women. Medical itinerations undertaken to the north, south, and south-east of Yezd were most successful; the teaching was listened to earnestly, and many Scripture portions were sold and distributed at a town called Bafk. Several of the hospital assistants at Ispahan had to be dismissed, and at Yezd there was some trouble with the hospital cook and two other servants, who were bigoted Bahais, and who, there was some reason to fear, were actively opposing Christianity.[3]

Successful itinerations

Stuart Memorial School

Good progress was made in the erection of new buildings for the Stuart Memorial School at Ispahan, which, for the fourth time since it occupied its present temporary quarters,[4] has been the object of hostile attempts by the mullahs. Happily on each occasion the only result has been to increase the number of pupils. The boys' school at Yezd grew slightly, and the fact that good posts were found for two of the boys is likely to be helpful in the immediate future. At Kerman the school was reopened after an interval of three years, and, though other schools had been set on foot meanwhile, it had gained a goodly number of pupils, some of them the sons of influential men, by the end of November.

Girls' schools for Persians,

The Persian Girls' School at Ispahan has between eighty and one hundred pupils, among the new boarders received during the year being a little Bakhtiari girl, a granddaughter of the Governor of Ispahan. A normal class is conducted in the school. Some of the girls on leaving become school teachers, and others assistants in mission hospitals, where the lessons of punctuality and order which they have learnt, as well as their knowledge of English, stand them in good stead. The Persians have asked that another mission school for Persian girls may be opened at the other side of the city; this has been sanctioned by the Committee, but owing to the war the project has not been proceeded with. The Armenian Girls' School at Julfa had some difficulty in finding suitable teachers, partly because such high salaries are now demanded, and partly because of the prevailing unbelief or indifference to religion. The spiritual life of several of the elder girls appeared to deepen, and the Sowers' Band in the school raised £15, which was applied to the support of an orphan at Nasik in Western India and of a boarder at the Persian Girls' School, and to the relief of the poor of Julfa. The Parsi Girls' School at Yezd held its own, and some of the elder girls asked for a special Bible class to be held for their benefit. Visiting former pupils is an important branch of the work, but more time is required for it than is available. Miss M. E. Brighty says that if long intervals are allowed to elapse between her visits she finds that girls who once appeared to be thoroughly in earnest, though as hearty as ever in greeting her, seem distinctly less receptive of the Gospel message.

INDIA

The population of India in 1911 was 316,000,000. All but one million of these were under British rule, the remainder being in French and Portuguese settlements. In British India the Hindus numbered 217½ millions; Mohammedans, 66½ millions; Buddhists (almost entirely in Burma) and Animists about 10 millions each; and Christians, 3,876,000. During the decade 1901–11 the increase in the general population was 7·1 per cent; among Hindus it was less than 7·5 per cent; Mohammedans less than 7 per cent; Animists, 20 per cent; and Christians, 32·6 per cent.

Lutheran missionaries under the S.P.C.K. laboured in South India in the eighteenth century, and many thousands of converts were baptized; but their Missions, after the death of Schwartz and other leaders, languished, and at length only a few Christians remained. In 1793 William Carey, the famous Baptist missionary, went out to Bengal, but for some years prior to the renewal of the East India Company's charter in 1813 no missionaries were allowed to reside within the British dominions, and he and his companions had to take refuge in the Danish settlements. Henry Martyn, who landed at Calcutta in 1806, had been in communication with the C.M.S., but he went out eventually as a chaplain of the East India Company. He and other government chaplains, men like Brown, Buchanan, Corrie, and Thomason, did what they could to prepare the way for future workers. The C.M.S. had an important share in the establishment of the bishopric of Calcutta in 1814 by its publication of Claudius Buchanan's work on the subject. In the following year the first two clergymen of the Church of England who went to India as missionaries were sent to Madras by the C.M.S.

In 1912 Protestant missionary societies in India had a staff of 1443 ordained and 3758 (of whom 3124, including wives, were women) lay foreign missionaries; there were also 1665 ordained and 36,793 lay Indian workers. Indian communicants numbered 568,000, and the offerings of Indian Christians amounted to Rs 1,734,338.[1]

Indian loyalty

BEYOND all doubt the chief event of the year 1914 in India was the magnificent display of loyalty on the part of its peoples towards the King Emperor. The Germans had relied on the unrest in the land to embarrass and cripple the operations of the British forces, but all their calculations were upset, and India so far from causing a diminution in the number of troops available for use in Europe increased them by some fine contingents. Perhaps the most remarkable feature of the wonderful rally to the aid of the Government, both in men and means, was its universality. It was shown by all classes, and by adherents of all religions, and revealed the innate loyalty of the Indian peoples. Canon W. Hooper, of Mussourie, wrote in September:—

Column after column in the daily papers is filled with news of expressions of the most widespread and enthusiastic loyalty to the British Crown which India has ever known, exceeding what the wildest imagination had before conceived possible. Offers of service from native princes were not so wonderful, for the Rajput loves an opportunity to fight; but the amount of money which has been poured forth, all over India, to swell the war funds which are being raised, would be incredible if one were not sure of the reality. The funds are being raised through the banks, and are being subscribed to liberally.

[1] "Year Book of Indian Missions, 1912."

To somewhat the same effect the Bombay correspondent of the "Times" expressed himself in November. He said:—

The war supported by the educated middle class

The British public have not fully grasped that this direct participation of India in the war is universally acclaimed. We might have expected that the martial princes of India, especially the brave and chivalrous Rajputs, would leap at the opportunity of active service. But the most remarkable feature of this war is the universal support of the educated middle class. I have tried to explain before that this is the class which in normal times is the most critical of government measures; it is the class which has most to gain from peace; yet they are with the Empire to a man. And this is not the fighting adherence of the martial races, or the passive acquiescence of the mass of the people who only want to be left alone; it is the reasoned support of the intellectuals. That support has been induced largely by the justice of our cause, for the Indian heart is with the lesser States; but au fond it springs from the conviction that Empire is essential for the progress of India. Only since welded into a single unit by the British Raj has India seen a chance of steady development; the preservation of that Raj is absolutely essential to the future of India. Yet it would be unjust if this summary of their position led to the belief that their loyalty was a calculating loyalty. It is a spontaneous loyalty because Indians know what we are—they are fighting for, and love, what they know.

From one Mission after another, and from one station after another in the Missions, come reports which speak of the Indian Christians, young and old, and others too, contributing of their means, and, where they have but little money, working with their hands, in order to swell the war funds. Help has been given, moreover, by means of prayer, and that not only on the part of Christians.

Though this loyalty, perhaps, is not actually due to the justice of the cause for which the British forces are fighting, since it existed before and has only been revealed, yet, the cause being what it is, has prevented the loyalty from being strained. This is significant. For it means that India has come to share in some measure in the ideal for which we strive. As the Rev. E. H. M. Waller says:—

The leavening influence of Christian ideals

One cannot take for granted the recognition of the ideal of a Christian Empire by a non-Christian country. There will, of course, be a broad foundation of ethic common to both. But this is more. And it seems to me to mark an epoch in the evolution of India's religious life. . . . The fact that India has recognized and endorsed the ideal is not fully explained till we remember that for more than a century the Gospel of Christ has been preached, and those who live in the country have detected many signs of the leavening influence of Christian ideals on the mind of India. To-day we have, I think, a practical proof of that saying that "the ideas that lie at the heart of the Gospel of Christ are permeating every part of Hindu society." [1]

Some illustrations of the way in which the ideals of Christianity have permeated Indian society are furnished by a series of conferences which were held in Karachi by non-Christians. At one of them, which dealt with social reform, resolutions were passed urging more widespread and higher education, and also lectures and associations for the education and social elevation of women; and advocating raising the marriageable age of girls, release from the rigour of the purdah system, attention to the miserable condition of young widows and their re-marriage, the gradual abolition of caste by inter-dining and inter-marriage, further protection for minor girls, the discouragement of nautches by women of ill-fame, the practice of monogamy, the elevation of untouchables, and the removal of restrictions against foreign travel. Speaking at this conference of the recent disastrous failures of Indian banks, Sir Narayan Chandavarkar, Chancellor of the University of Bombay and a Justice of the Bombay High Court, used these words :—

Social reforms advocated

> It is well that all this has happened, if it will only bring home to us the imperative necessity of grasping and living by the inspiration of the teaching of all our great religious and social reformers that the true foundations of a nation's life are love of God and love of man; that, in other words, the purification of our religious ideals and a wider diffusion of justice in our social institutions must form the root and basis of all other attempts at progress. We have had our day of pseudo-Swadeshiism; it has shown us what we are and where we are. Let us by all means strive for wealth by means of commerce and industry, but let us by all means strive for it by standing on the ancient highway laid out for us by our own Rishis who sanely said, "Pursue wealth by pursuing the path of Dharma," which means our primary duty to God. It is the same truth which the Master embodied in sacredness of phrase all His own, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God . . .; and all . . . things shall be added unto you."

In many ways the present is a time of transition. The once popular doctrine of the transmigration of souls tends to be held less tenaciously, and even some Namburi Brahmans in Cochin say that they can no longer believe it. In some parts of India the young men are realizing the vanity of idols. The "average educated Indian," says the Rev. A. C. Pelly, "has discarded his old faith. He ridicules idolatry as out of date. The danger is lest he become agnostic or materialistic. The room has been cleansed, and the man is looking about for a new occupant. Shall he take to himself seven spirits worse than the first? If he does not open the door to Christ, the seven devils of Christian Science, Unitarianism, Theosophy, Arya Samaj, Materialism, Agnosticism, and Spiritualism, will rush in." With the masses a different state of affairs prevails. Great movements towards Christianity are taking place among the depressed classes and others in widely separated parts of the land, but the old religious observances hold their own with millions. Sacrifices are still offered to the malign goddesses of cholera, smallpox, and the like [1]; the people still throng in their thousands to the great religious festivals; impurity with the sanction of religion is still rife; oppression of the low castes and outcastes still continues, some of them being forbidden even to allow themselves to be seen; and, in spite of all the talk about raising the depressed classes, practical efforts in that direction at times are the cause of riots.[1] Yet, India is seeking God. A religious devotee, sitting by the roadside meditating, was one day asked to direct a man to a certain town. No notice being taken, the inquiry was repeated, only to meet with the counter question, "Sir, can you show me the way to God?"[2]

Indian missionary societies

In seeking to show to peoples of India the "way to God," an increasingly important, though still small part, is taken by indigenous missionary societies, such as the National Missionary Society of India, and the Indian Missionary Society of Tinnevelly. The latter works in the Haidarabad State, and also among the Pulayars, a hill tribe of the Western Ghats. That section of the tribe which is found on the Tinnevelly side of the hills was first reached some years ago by an evangelist sent forth by the Missionary Association of the Tinnevelly District Council[3]; the other side of the ridge, to which he also penetrated, is in the Travancore Diocese, but as it is more accessible from British India than from Travancore arrangements were made for all the work to be superintended from Tinnevelly. In process of time it was taken over by the Indian Missionary Society, the Missionary Association making an annual grant of Rs 500 in aid of it. The Rev. E. S. Carr, the chairman of the Tinnevelly District Council, visited the district in 1914, and had the privilege of baptizing 103 Pulayars, who, he says, had been "splendidly prepared" by the evangelist. Elsewhere also the work of the Indian Missionary Society has prospered, 650 persons having been baptized, and some 1000 inquirers enrolled. Its receipts, too, have increased rapidly, and now amount to about Rs 16,000 per annum.[4]

Signs of the progress of Christianity

The question of synodical government

The existence and success of these societies is evidence that Christianity has made great progress, as also was the All-India conference of Indian Christians, the first of its kind, which was held in Calcutta in December, 1914.[5] Another indication of the same fact has been the contemplation, as mentioned in last year's Report,[6] of a system of synodical government of the Church. A good deal of progress had been made in the matter in the diocese of Bombay, and a draft constitution for a synod had been drawn up,[7] but ecclesiastical lawyers expressed the opinion that such a system of church government would be illegal in India, since the Church in India has no independent existence apart from the Church at home; the Bishop of Bombay accordingly decided that it was useless to proceed with the original scheme, and asked the drafting committee to recast and adapt its draft to the scheme of a diocesan council. This has been done, and the council, which, of course, has no legislative or governing authority, was inaugurated in March, 1915. Church organization, however, has advanced by the formation of the diocese of Assam, of which the Rev. H. Pakenham-Walsh, a missionary of the S.P.G., was consecrated bishop in January, 1915.

There is plenty of proof, besides that furnished by the development of organization, that Christianity is gaining ground in India. The evidence of the census reports is conclusive,[1] and to it may be added that afforded by the friendly attitude which high government officials adopt towards missionary work. Both by deeds and words do they show their sympathy with it, sympathy which would most certainly be withheld did they not believe the work to be genuine. Sir A. Lawley, a former Governor of Madras, speaking at the C.M.S. Anniversary in 1914, after referring to the "splendid achievements of the Church Missionary Society among the weak and impotent races over which England has cast her ægis" in Uganda, used these words concerning the work of the Society in Tinnevelly:—

Sympathy of high government officials with missionary work

> Great is the educational work which the C.M.S. is doing, but greater still is the work of bringing erring souls who have been lost in the abysmal darkness of heathenism to the knowledge of the Gospel of Christ. It is to the outcaste, the abject outcaste, the despised pariah, that the Master of all the ages has come with His message of hope and love, and His promise of life. And to-day, ranged under the banner of the C.M.S., there is in Tinnevelly a Christian community of men and women looking to their Lord and Master Christ, who have freed themselves from the shackles of caste and who are emancipated from Hinduism. There they are, a self-respecting, intelligent, and upright community, a community honoured and honourable, and an element of stability and of progress in the social fabric.[2]

Again, Lord Pentland, who has succeeded Sir A. Lawley at Madras, in reply to an address presented to him at Palamcotta in March, 1914, by the Christian community of Tinnevelly, referred to "the noble work which is being carried on here by missionary bodies," and spoke of the Christian audience before him as "splendid and impressive"[3]; while during the year under review he paid visits to the Sarah Tucker College and the Blind School at Palamcotta, and the Tinnevelly College, and afterwards gave much friendly help to the first named. Lord Carmichael, the Governor of Bengal, opened the new hostel buildings of St. Paul's College, Calcutta, and contributed largely to the fund for the erection of a swimming bath and gymnasium for the college; Lady Carmichael paid a visit to St. Paul's School at Calcutta, and also spoke at a meeting in aid of the medical work of the C.E.Z.M.S. at Krishnagar which was held at the house of Lady Duke, the wife of the late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal; Sir James Meston, Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces, visited the Queen Victoria High School at Agra, and laid the foundation stone of a new Bible House at Allahabad; and the Hon. J. S. Donald, Chief Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province, laid memorial tablets to Dr. Pennell in the new hospital at Bannu.

From time to time also words are spoken by non-Christians which are gratifying as showing that the objects which the C.M.S. and other societies have in view are being attained. Thus, on the occasion of his visit to Tinnevelly, mentioned above, Lord Pentland summoned a meeting of officials to discuss educational questions. During the conference the Governor asked for a candid opinion as to whether mission schools were of greater, equal, or less value than those under government or other management; and in response a Mohammedan deputy collector rose, and said that he had observed that while in government schools the teachers were keen on obtaining good results from their pupils in examinations, in mission schools that was not the main object. There, while every effort was made to provide a good education, the chief object was to form the character of the pupils committed to the teachers' care. This opinion came with great weight, since the speaker had himself spent some years as a pupil in a mission school.

The chief object of mission schools

Honour men as missionaries

Missionary work among a people of such intellectual power as many of the Hindus demands that the home Church should give of its very best in order that the Holy War may be carried on. That it has done so in considerable measure is shown by a remarkable list in the "Calcutta Diocesan Record" of university men who, having taken high honours, have lately been working, or are under appointment to work, in connexion with the C.M.S. in India. The list, which was reproduced in the "C.M. Review,"[2] contains the name of nine double firsts, a senior wrangler, and several college fellows and university prizemen.

PUNJAB, NORTH-WEST FRONTIER, AND SINDH MISSION

PAST HISTORY

The Punjab Mission was begun in 1851, soon after the annexation of the province to British India. The first station occupied was Amritsar, the sacred city of the Sikhs; Peshawar was occupied in 1854; Multan, 1856; Narowal, 1859; Dera Ismail Khan, 1862; Srinagar, 1863; Bannu, 1865; Lahore, 1867; Clarkabad, 1873; Batala, 1878; Tarn Taran, 1885; Quetta, 1886; the Chenab Colony (formerly known as the Jhang Bar), 1899; Islamabad, 1902. Work was commenced at Kotgur in 1844 and Simla in 1845, prior to the annexation of the Punjab. At Lahore a divinity school was founded in 1870 by the Rev. (afterwards Bishop) T. V. French. The Rev. G. M. Gordon (who was killed at Kandahar, 16 August, 1880) established, mainly at his own expense, stations at Pind Dadan Khan and Dera Ghazi Khan, both near the frontier, the latter as a base for work among the Baluch tribes, but these have since been abandoned, because of the weakness of the mission staff in the one case, and the inroads of the Indus in the other. Several stations fringe the British frontier, the most important of which is Peshawar, where work among the Afghans was established in 1854 under the auspices of Sir Herbert Edwardes, then Commissioner of the Division. In the Valley of Kashmir a medical mission was started by Dr. Elmslie in 1865, which has been a great blessing to the people, especially at the time of the famine in 1880 and the earthquake in 1885. The work in the Punjab is deeply indebted to men like Lord Lawrence, Sir H. Edwardes, Sir R. Montgomery, Sir D. McLeod, Generals Lake, Taylor, and Maclagan, Colonel Martin, and others, who nobly exerted themselves to bring the Gospel to the people under their administration.

The Sindh Mission is slightly older in date, having been begun in 1850, but is far behind in progress, owing mainly to its having always been quite undermanned. Yet important fruit has been granted to the patient labours of the Rev. J. Sheldon and others at Karachi (commenced 1850), Haidarabad (1856), and Sukkur (1859) on the Indus.

The diocese of Lahore was founded in 1877. The Right Rev. H. B. Durrant, formerly a C.M.S. missionary, is the present bishop.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

There are five sections of the Mission: the Punjab, Kashmir, the North-West Frontier Province, Baluchistan, and Sindh.

I. Of the fifteen stations in the Punjab, thirteen are in the plains, namely, Lahore, Clarkabad, Multan, Batemanabad, Gojra, Montgomerywala, and Toba Tek Singh, in the Lahore mission district; and Amritsar, Asrapur, Batala, Ajnala, Tarn Taran, and Narowal, in the Amritsar mission district; while two, Simla and Kotgur, are in the Himalayas.

Educational work is carried on by means of a divinity school at Lahore, and the Lefroy Training School for village workers at Clarkabad; high schools at Amritsar, Batala (Baring School for Christians and A.L.O.E. School for non-Christians), and Multan; Anglo-vernacular middle schools at Bahawalpur, Fathgarh, Majitha, and Narowal; and a vernacular middle boarding school, with training classes for primary school teachers, at Clarkabad. For girls there are the Alexandra High School and a middle-class boarding school (with a normal class) at Amritsar, and a large boarding school for village girls at Clarkabad; these are mainly for Christians. At Lahore there is a widows' home.

Medical work is represented by a hospital at Amritsar, with affiliated dispensaries at Narowal, Jandiala, etc.; and a women's hospital at Multan. Some medical work is also carried on at Kotgur.

Considerable bodies of Indian Christians are found in the neighbourhood of Amritsar, Narowal, Batala, and Tarn Taran, at Clarkabad, and in the Chenab Colony, to whom either European or Indian clergymen minister.

II. The Society has two stations in Kashmir—Srinagar, the capital, and Islamabad, some thirty miles higher up the Jhelum River to the south.

At the former there are a high school for boys, with a branch school at Islamabad; a general hospital; and a leper asylum supported by the Kashmir Government, but managed by the Society's missionaries. There is also a women's hospital at Islamabad.

III. At each of the three strategic points occupied by the Society in the North-West Frontier Province, namely, Peshawar, Bannu, and Dera Ismail Khan, at the entrances to the several passes into Afghanistan, a hospital is maintained, by means of which many members of the wild frontier tribes are influenced. Branch hospitals and dispensaries are also carried on at outlying places.

There are the Edwardes College and High School at Peshawar, and high schools also at Bannu and Dera Ismail Khan.

IV. At Quetta, the Society's only station in Baluchistan, there is a hospital, with two branch dispensaries in Kalat State.

V. Karachi, Haidarabad, and Sukkur, three important centres, are the stations in Sindh. At the first named there is a high school and also a bookshop. A temporary hospital, chiefly for ophthalmic work, is open at Shikarpur for a few weeks during the winter months.

The C.E.Z.M.S. carries on women's work at Amritsar, Ajnala, Asrapur, Batala, Tarn Taran, Narowal, Srinagar, Peshawar, Dera Ismail Khan, Quetta, Karachi, Haidarabad, Sukkur, etc. It is responsible for hospitals at most of these stations, and educational work at many of them, notably Amritsar and Karachi.

The staff of the Mission consists of 35 European and 23 Indian clergymen, 18 European laymen, 42 wives of missionaries, and 23 other women missionaries; 21 of the above are doctors and 8 are trained nurses. In addition there are 152 Indian Christian lay agents on the staff of the Mission.

The following are the members of the Punjab Corresponding Committee for 1915: The Bishop of Lahore, Archdeacon Warlow, Mr. W. S. Dorman, P.W.D., Colonel Hendley, I.M.S., Colonel Maclagan, R.E., Mr. W. H. L. Church, Mr. E. Tydeman, the Revs. H. E. Clark, H. G. Crabtree, E. Guilford, P. Ireland Jones, J. A. Wood, and C. M. Gough (acting secretary), and Dr. A. Lankester. The corresponding committee, however, deals only with personal matters affecting the European missionaries. The local governing body of the Mission is the Executive Committee of the Central Mission Council, which consists of the members of the corresponding committee, together with Archdeacon Ihsan Ullah (ex officio), and eight European missionaries or Indian clergymen, elected from the district mission councils.

Conventions

Two united gatherings for the deepening of the spiritual life and for mutual counsel took place in the Punjab. From 4–6 March, 1914, a retreat for the Indian clergymen of the diocese of Lahore, together with some of the senior lay workers, was held at Tarn Taran; and a few months earlier a three days' conference of women teachers, the first of its kind for women, met at Beas. In this connexion may be mentioned the annual convention at Sialkot, conducted on "Keswick" lines, which was attended in 1914 by about 1400 persons, most of them Indian Christians.

Deaths of Rev. T. Howell,

The Indian Christian community has sustained a loss by the death at Amritsar on 22 November, 1914, of the Rev. T. Howell. After his ordination in 1882, he was stationed for ten years at Pind Dadan Khan, where he had previously worked as a lay evangelist. In 1892 he was transferred to Clarkabad, and subsequently to Montgomerywala, finally becoming incumbent of Holy Trinity Church, Lahore, in 1904. Canon E. F. E. Wigram, the secretary of the Mission, says that Mr. Howell was a doughty champion in the sphere of Mohammedan controversy, and spent no inconsiderable sum out of his private income in controverting Moslem anti-Christian literature.

Miss L. E. A. Fagg,

The staff of the Mission has also suffered greatly by the death of Miss L. E. A. Fagg, a trained nurse, which occurred at Bannu on 11 April, 1915. She received her training under the Society at The Olives, and joined the Mission in 1909. She was greatly loved by the Indian women.

Rev. F. H. Baring,

Four former workers in the Mission have passed away. The Rev. F. H. Baring, a son of Bishop Baring of Durham, who died at Kame in New Zealand on 22 September, 1914, was an honorary missionary of the C.M.S. from 1872–80. He founded the high school for Christian boys at Batala which bears his name.[1]

Rev. T. R. Wade,

The Rev. T. R. Wade received his home call at Eastbourne on October 23. He laboured in the Mission from 1863–1910. He was one of the early missionaries in Kashmir, and compiled a Kashmiri grammar, and translated the New Testament and Prayer Book into that language; but his chief work was at Amritsar, where he was superintending missionary for twenty-one years. His younger daughter is now on the staff of the Mission.[2]

Mrs. H. S. Patterson,

On November 6 Mrs. H. S. Patterson, whose husband worked in the Punjab under the C.M.S. from 1862–6, passed away at Tiverton.

and Miss A. J. Edgley

Miss A. J. Edgley, who died on December 31, sailed for India under the C.E.Z.M.S. in 1888. Although she did not join the C.M.S. until 1904 the greater part of her service in the Punjab was at C.M.S. institutions—at the Alexandra School at Amritsar from 1888–96, and from 1901–9, and at the girls' boarding school at Clarkabad from 1896–1901. In 1908 she took up work among purdah girls at Lahore, finally returning to England early in 1914.[3]

The Punjab Mission is the largest of all the Society's Missions in North India as measured by the number of converts, and of all its Indian Missions as measured by the number of missionaries. But many more workers are needed in order that the spheres assigned to the Society may be adequately manned and worked. During the ten years 1904–14 the staff of missionaries and Indian clergymen only increased by one, although there was an addition of nearly 15,000 to the number of Christians under their charge. In 1904 there were thirty-seven European clergymen, nineteen Indian clergymen, twenty laymen, and twenty-five women (besides wives of missionaries) on the staff; in 1914 the figures were respectively thirty-one, twenty, twenty, and thirty-one. The number of European clergymen, it will be noticed, has diminished by six during the decade, and there has been no corresponding increase in the number of their Indian brethren. One consequence is that too much work is thrown on some of the missionaries. The Rev. C. M. Gough, for example, at the end of 1914 was in charge of the station at Clarkabad, with its many activities, and at the same time was acting secretary for both the C.M.S. and the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society in the Punjab. Again, at Amritsar, where some eight years ago there were, besides the doctors, two ordained men for educational work, a missionary in general charge of the station, an ordained man set apart for work in the villages, and two recruits, one a clergyman and the other a layman, there were only the missionary in charge and one other ordained man in October, 1914. Happily the Mission was reinforced in the year under review by four European and four Indian clergymen, besides two women missionaries; but on the other hand the Committee accepted the resignations of Dr. R. J. L. F. Hoffmann and Mrs. A. H. Browne.

Literary work

Dr. A. Neve completed the revision of the Gospels in Kashmiri, and the Rev. T. Mansukhani prepared "Studies in the Bhagavad Gita" and a life of the prophet Elijah, in Sindhi.

I. THE PUNJAB

Evangelistic work

THE mass movement in the Punjab, which has been so conspicuous in recent C.M.S. Reports, is chiefly seen among two classes of people, the Chuhras and Chamars. The Chuhras, sometimes called Mehtars, are supposed to be of aboriginal descent. Most of them are sweepers and scavengers, but they are increasingly taking to agriculture as tenants and farm servants, and some have risen to practically independent positions. They are untouchables, that is food touched by them will not be eaten by high-caste Hindus; but in the Punjab contact with the untouchables does not pollute sufficiently to necessitate bathing or washing the clothes, except in the case of scavengers or those who pursue other unclean professions. The Chuhras worship either Balmik or Lalbeg, the latter a disciple of Balmik; Balmik was either the author of "Ramayana," a Brahman saint deified by scavengers, or else a highway robber who was converted into a religious preacher by the impressive advice of some passing sage—it is not quite certain which.[1] The Chamars, who are tanners and leather workers and the menials of villages, rank higher than the Chuhras, since as a rule they abstain from scavenging. Their caste is functional in origin. Representing, as they do, the lowest stratum of society their numbers are continually being recruited by degradation from higher castes.[1] Almost all the low-caste people in the C.M.S. districts of the Central Punjab are Chuhras, while the Cambridge Delhi Mission has work among the Chamars. The great majority of these people are illiterate, and that fact, as well as the large numbers willing to be taught, necessitates a good staff of workers. In the Jhang Bar all the low-caste people are said to be likely to come under Christian instruction, and there is a strong movement among the adherents of the Salvation Army to seek baptism and even confirmation. In one village three Christian families were met who had not before been known of, and it was found that a couple of boys attending the government village school conducted services for them both on Sundays and weekdays. An incident recorded by Canon Ali Bakhsh shows the dark and the bright sides of a mass movement. Referring to a village to which he went he writes :—

School-boys conducting services

> While I was arranging with a worker to visit and instruct the people further, one woman shouted out, "Have you brought us land? Why shall we become Christians?" Some of them answered, "Many people give up lands and property and become Christians; why shall we ask for land?"

Nearly 500 baptisms had been recorded in the Batala district by the middle of November, as compared with 275 in the whole of 1913; on one occasion eighty-four persons were baptized, on another fifty-six, on a third fifty-two, and so on. In the Tarn Taran district 198 persons were baptized, and the year closed with the names of 300 inquirers on the roll; thirty of the new converts were the firstfruits of one village, and among the others were a high-caste Hindu at the leper asylum, and a young Sikh who first heard of Christ in an elementary mission school and from preachers who from time to time visited the village where he lived; afterwards, while in Shanghai, he was taught about the Saviour by a Punjabi Christian who had settled in that city. Considerable ingatherings are reported from other parts of the Punjab. Fifty-five adults were baptized in the Clarkabad district; forty-seven in the Ajnala district, where a Mohammedan fakir was among the inquirers; and seven at Asrapur; while in the Narowal district 213 adults, as compared with 185 in 1913, were received into the visible Church, and at the end of the year 2167 persons were under instruction, as compared with 1986 twelve months before.

Large numbers of baptisms

There is every reason to hope that the movement, the bare results of which have thus been indicated, will be sustained, in view of the large sale of Bibles and Christian books provided by the Punjab branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society and the Punjab Religious Book Society. At Samundari, in the Chenab Colony, 600 Urdu or Gurmukhi Bible portions were sold during the year, most of them to non-Christians; at Amritsar the daily sale of Scripture portions was from two to four times as great as in 1909; from one camp in the Batala district forty-eight villages were visited and 117 gospels sold, and at other centres also the missionaries found a like ready sale for the Christian Scriptures; in the Tarn Taran district almost every boy who can read buys a gospel, and at each monthly mela about 200 gospels were sold, although comparatively few of those who assembled were literate; and the Rev. H. E. Clark reports the sale of 7000 testaments in the year, either in the Batemanabad district, or in the bazaars of Lahore, or while travelling by rail. These large sales are to be attributed in some degree to the progress of vernacular education, but they are full of promise for the future of missionary work.

Mass movement wide-spread but not universal

Although, as has been shown, the mass movement is widespread, it is not universal; it exists mainly in the villages of the plain, and is less marked in the towns and in the hills. The people in the villages around Amritsar responded well to the teaching they received, and there were many openings among them, but in Amritsar itself, though there was less opposition than in some previous years, little desire for the Gospel was shown, and only one zenana pupil displayed any real interest in Christianity. Much the same state of affairs prevailed in the town of Narowal as concerned evangelistic work.

Varied methods

Various methods are used to bring to the people of the Punjab the knowledge of Christ. Bazaar preaching is maintained at the stations; meetings, non-controversial in character, of the leading non-Christians are held at Narowal, at which representatives of different religions gather together and discuss questions as to the bearing of religion on life and conduct, at least sixty men being present on the occasion of a visit by Bishop Durrant; lectures are given to the students at the Sikh theological college at Tarn Taran; work is carried on among servants at Simla, many of whom belong to low castes, and who, though they have never been baptized, give it out that they are Christians in order to raise themselves in the social scale; and women are visited in their zenanas. The workers at Multan have about fifty zenana pupils, and an "amazing change" in the attitude of the people towards Christianity is noticeable. At Lahore the C.M.S. women missionaries, besides their ordinary zenana work, have charge of a women's home, to which girls are sent for protection and discipline.

An "amazing change" in attitude towards Christianity

Pastoral work

Shepherding the converts, always a necessary and responsible task, is specially so in the Punjab, because of the dense ignorance of so many of them. At a large gathering of Christian women at Toba Tek Singh, it was found that only three could read, and in a village in that region not one of the fifty-five women who came together, not even the wife of the Scripture reader, was literate.

Illiteracy of Christian women

The Mothers' Union is doing excellent work among the Christian women, and at Montgomerywala, out of 300 women in the village, 162 are on the register of the mothers' meeting, and there is a weekly attendance of between ninety and 140. The difficulty of exercising supervision over the converts is increased by their often being widely scattered, and some of the missionaries spend much time in their districts combining pastoral and evangelistic work. Now and again large united services are held in the villages. The Rev. R. Force-Jones describes one which he held at a place called Shikar, in the Batala district. He says :—

A combined village service.

We held the service on a big open space in front of our tents, the church being far too small for the number present. It was a wonderful sight to see the procession of Christians from different villages wending their way through the cornfields to our tent for service, singing as they came, each procession being headed by drums and cymbals. Some of the people had walked several miles; nevertheless, when they arrived at our tents, instead of sitting down to rest after their journey, they stood round in rings, singing hymns and Psalms, their faces lit up with a wonderful joy. It was a grand service, or rather services, for they lasted all day, and was a Sunday that we missionaries who were present will not easily forget. I took my stand underneath a tree for service, and all around seated on the ground were the Christians, and beyond them a very large number of Hindus and Mohammedans who were attracted by such a large gathering. We concluded our services with the Holy Communion, which I administered at the door of the tent. Towards evening the different processions, for they represented no less than nine villages, started on their way home, apparently not in the least tired after the day's services, for they went off singing as heartily as when they came.

A good deal of superstition not unnaturally survives among the Christians, constant quarrels marred the life of the Church at Tarn Taran, and some difficulty was experienced at Amritsar through the unworthy conduct of converts attracted from other parts of India in search of employment. In the last named district, too, the Christians are spoken of as extremely negligent with regard to the education of their children. But many of the converts bear a good character. A growth of Christian manliness took place at Batemanabad, while the Narowal Christians are said to be marked by their diligent attendance at divine worship, their liberality, their efforts towards self-support and self-government (Bishop Durrant describes them as "wonderful"), and their renewed zeal in learning. Two incidents which illustrate the spirit of some of them are narrated by Mr. J. D. Finlay :—

A promise held sacred

A Christian living some distance off promised to bring a certain article of food the same day as that on which I met him. Night had far advanced, and I had given up all hope of his coming, when a knock announced his arrival and with him of the article he had promised to bring, although it must have entailed hours of labour, as well as a journey of four or five miles in the dark. When questioned as to why he had so troubled himself, he replied, "I made a promise, and being a Christian would I not fulfil it?" This week-end some of the Christian boys were invited to join cricket and football teams going to a place eleven miles off to play some matches. In the ordinary way they would have had to return on Sunday, and they were even invited to play on that day and would be fed gratis, etc., but they declined, and although tired, walked back the eleven miles in the dark in order to keep the Fourth Commandment.

Christian panchayats

In villages containing a considerable number of Christians a committee of five members, called a panchayat, is organized, which either decides, or aids the missionaries in deciding, disputes which arise in the community, and undertakes other work connected with the Church. Thus in the Tarn Taran district the combined panchayats of four villages met to talk over their difficulties and make suggestions for progress; they agreed that the Christmas festival and festivities should be celebrated in their own villages, and not only at the head station, and one man offered to defray all the expense of the combined festivities in that district.

Divinity College

Men are prepared for ordination or for work as catechists at the Divinity College, Lahore, where nine students were in residence; one of them hailed from Madras, another from Bombay, a third was preparing for work at Aurangabad, and a fourth to act as evangelist in the C.M.S. hospital at Srinagar. In a description of the "course proposed" at the college, Bishop French, its founder, wrote as follows:—

> The Bible to be the beginning, sum, and centre of all our teaching. . . . The main object is that successive bands of students, of high character and principle and modern attainments . . . should be engaged here in prayerful Biblical study, with such kindred studies as pertain to the right understanding, correct interpretation, and practical employment in the Christian ministry (whether as pastors or evangelists) of God's most holy Word—the vernaculars of the Punjab and North-West India being the medium of instruction.

The aim thus enunciated is still steadfastly kept in view. As the Rev. F. Lawrence, the principal of the college, says: "However and by whomsoever work is carried on among the Indian peoples, Christian or non-Christian, one of the first requisites in a teacher must ever be a real working knowledge of the Bible. To create a sense of this need (by no means universally felt) and to supply it, as far as in us lies, is our main object." A Divinity Class for the village ministry, with two members, was also conducted at Narowal in 1914. The Bishop Lefroy Training School at Clarkabad, which was opened in November, 1913, with eight men, is an institution for training men as village readers. The idea is that the men should have an elementary school for Christian boys in their immediate neighbourhood, their wives if possible teaching the girls, and should be so well grounded in their Bible and Prayer Book as to be able further to provide daily helpful ministrations for the little flocks committed to their care, instructing the catechumens, building up the baptized, and doing what they can to bridge the periods between the visits of the ordained pastor.

Bishop Lefroy Training School

As some buildings were available for the school, the large grant which it has received from the Pan-Anglican Thankoffering will be used mainly as an endowment fund to provide scholarships for the men while in training. Training Classes for primary teachers, one for boys and the other for girls, are also carried on at Clarkabad; another, of higher grade, is held at the Middle Class Girls' School at Amritsar. The C.M.S. has four High Schools for boys in the Punjab. At the Amritsar school, eighteen of the twenty-six who entered for the matriculation examination were successful; one of the masters, a Bengali-speaking graduate who had been brought to Christ in the Duff College of the Presbyterian Mission at Calcutta, was baptized. The C.M.S. high school at Multan, for the second year in succession gained better results in the matriculation examination than any of the three other high schools in the town. Of the five Middle Schools for boys that at Narowal has 250 pupils. Three hostels are connected with it, for Christians, Hindus, and Mohammedans respectively. There is constant demand for more hostel accommodation, and it will be necessary to raise the school to high school standard and build a large hostel to accommodate 300 boys in the near future. Valued help in the boys' secondary schools is rendered by a number of short service men, one of whom, Mr. B. Corfield, a son of a former principal of the Baring High School at Batala, was in charge of that institution for some time.

Middle schools

The Alexandra High School at Amritsar is mainly for Christians, and fifteen of the girls were confirmed in 1914. One of the few non-Christian day scholars died in the summer; before she passed away she confessed before her people that she trusted in Christ. The Middle Class Girls' School, also at Amritsar, has nearly one hundred boarders; all the girls who went in for the middle and English examinations passed. In all these secondary schools and in the elementary schools the teachers, Canon Wigram says, like the engineers in warfare, "sap through the comparatively soft ground of youth, constantly presenting to the minds of the many hundreds of boys and girls who enter the schools Christian ideals and standards of aspirations." There are twenty-one village schools in the Amritsar district, which are attended by 771 boys.

If educationists are the sappers of the missionary army, doctors and nurses are its gunners, "preparing difficult positions for assault by a bombardment heavy and continuous enough to demoralize the enemy's powers of resistance." At Multan, where is a women's hospital, the people were much more ready than before to listen to the daily teaching, and some even asked to be taught; but it is very difficult for any of them to confess Christ in baptism—they are so fast bound by the fetters of caste and family ties. One of the servants, however, a Mohammedan woman, who has no children and whose husband has cast her out because of her ill-health, was baptized in 1914. Two nurses trained at the hospital passed their final examination. Itinerations were made in the Dera Ghazi Khan district, while visits were paid periodically to the five dispensaries affiliated to the hospital at Amritsar, and one more extended itineration was made from that centre.[1]

II. KASHMIR

KASHMIR is practically a Mohammedan country. Ninety-four per cent of the population of the valley are Mussulmans. The small remainder is composed mostly of high-caste Hindus, who rule the country. In the whole Kashmir State, the total number of Christians at the 1911 census was 975, of whom 709 were Indians. The number of Christians in the State has grown steadily, but the increase has been chiefly in the Jammu Province, where the Scottish Presbyterian Church is at work, and there has been but little change in the number of Christians connected with the C.M.S. At the end of 1903 it was thirty-seven, and ten years later it was thirty, not one Kashmiri woman being among them. The writer of the census report says that the major portion of the State is essentially a priest-ridden country, owing to the ignorance of the people; "whatever instruction they receive from their respective religious guides becomes part and parcel of their existence, and there is nothing worldly which can shake them."[2]

Kashmir a priest-ridden country

There are few signs of any material improvement being likely in the immediate future. It is true that through the work of the hospital at Srinagar, where Scripture portions met with a ready sale in 1914, God's Word is being diffused all over Kashmir, and that the women listen willingly to the teaching given in the wards, while in the women's hospital at Islamabad some of the patients seemed to respond, and a few even expressed faith in Christ; but great importance cannot be attached to their expressing agreement with what is said, seeing that they are given to doing so even when they have not understood anything. The hospital at Srinagar received from a wealthy American friend a gift of about one-twentieth of a gramme of radium, which it is hoped will prove efficacious in the treatment of the lepers in the state asylum, of which the missionaries are in charge. Quite distinct from the work at the hospital, which is carried on by Drs. A. and E. F. Neve, is that of Dr. Kate Knowles in the city, where she seeks among other things to improve the utterly inhuman conditions under which the women of Srinagar are often compelled by the superstitions of their husbands to approach the hour of child-birth.

Srinagar High School

The hostel connected with the High School at Srinagar was burnt down in March, 1914. A Christian Abyssinian, who had run away three times from one school and had been expelled from another, and who could not be kept at home on account of his bad influence on his brothers and sisters, had been admitted, and distinguished himself by a variety of misdeeds, for which, of course, he had to be punished. In revenge he climbed on to the roof of the hostel and set fire to the beams, and, much wood having been used in the construction of the building, it was soon burnt out. Not only the boys, but also a regiment of the Maharajah's infantry lent their aid in fighting the flames.[1] Against this disaster may be set the return to the school as a master of Samuel Baqqal, B.A., B.T., whose conversion and consequent persecution, while a pupil in the school, were recorded in the Annual Report for 1907–8.[2] During an epidemic of cholera which broke out in the city some of the boys remained on duty day and night to give medicine to any who needed it, and they were instrumental in saving seventy-three lives. The branch school at Islamabad is under a Brahman head master, a man who on one occasion faced an angry crowd in the bazaar and said, "Is it then such a bad thing to be a Christian? Do you know anything about Jesus Christ? I have read the Bible—come, and I will read it to you, and you will see that there was nothing but good in Him and His work." The decided stand taken by the head master on the side of Christianity increased the interest of the lads in their Bible lessons, and the sullen air of resistance which marked them in previous years was exchanged for evident keenness and pleasure. Miss A. M. Coverdale, returning to Islamabad in the spring of 1914 after an absence of two years at Srinagar, experienced much difficulty in finding a house in which to hold a school for girls, but the master of the boys' school came to her rescue. She wrote in November:—

Boys help to fight cholera

Brave stand made for Christianity by a Brahman mission schoolmaster

> Several years ago he had bought a small piece of land near his home in the town, and when he saw (and helped me through) the great difficulty of getting any place in which to start a girls' school in 1907 and 1908, he resolved to build a house himself some day for this very purpose. Since then he has been collecting materials; but he is poor, and the only wage earner in a large family. Up to a year ago his wages had never reached £1 a month. What is more, he is honest, or he could have built a house long ago. When my search for a house for the girls' school began again this year, he came and told me his plans, and how much he had in hand, and said that if he could borrow the comparatively small sum of £20 he could in a few months put up a house suitable for me to begin work in. After consulting my colleagues, who said they did not see that anything else could be done, and Canon Wigram, who was spending Whitsuntide with us, I undertook to advance the money to the master, and although it is still an unfinished building, yet in August I was able to start school in the very pleasant open-on-all-sides upper floor of a new house.

A young man of good family was baptized in the autumn, who had first been drawn to Christianity by the Bible lessons at a mission school seven years before.

III. NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE

Memorial to Dr. Pennell

In the North-West Frontier Province as well as in Kashmir, progress has been slow, but two men were baptized at Peshawar in 1914, who were more or less directly the fruit of work at the hospital. One of them, a Hindu, had been an in-patient some years before, and was greatly influenced by Dr. Nazir Ullah, the Indian house surgeon; and the other, a young mullah, had been sent to work in a mosque at the station, but having heard the Gospel at Quetta he felt he could not continue his work as mullah, and day by day he attended the service for out-patients so as to gain a fuller knowledge of Christianity. Most of the patients at Peshawar are drawn from across the frontier, and their women are not kept in seclusion, and will not enter the zenana hospital. A need for a woman doctor at the C.M.S. hospital is thus created, and it was met in 1914 by the kind help of Dr. Janet Vaughan, an independent worker. A new out-patient block, erected as a memorial to the late Dr. Pennell, was completed at Bannu, and a zenana block was nearly finished. The Bannu hospital has branch hospitals at Karak and Thal. Faithful work is done at Karak by Dr. Jahan Khan, an Afghan by race, Dr. Pennell's first convert, and though he has not yet been permitted to win any converts he has been instrumental in gaining a great influence over the people, and the leading mullah of the district, who once was very bitter in his opposition to everything Christian, has now become most friendly. The number of patients at Dera Ismail Khan increased considerably.[1]

Edwardes College holds its own

During the last year or two much anxiety has been felt as to the position of Edwardes College at Peshawar, in view of the opening of the new Islamia College.[2] That institution has been represented as the outcome of a spontaneous effort of Mohammedans in the province, but when requests for financial help for the scheme were made they were couched in the name of the Chief Commissioner of the province, and were emphasized by the fact that his personal assistant is the honorary secretary of the Islamia College committee. The Government at one time was making the Islamia College and school a grant of Rs 40,000 per annum, and scholarships were provided from district funds, tenable only at that institution. The prestige of this new college, which was opened in the autumn of 1913, and the offer of the scholarships naturally affected Edwardes College, and the freshmen's class in that year only contained nine men, one of them a Mohammedan, instead of nineteen, including twelve Mohammedans, as in 1912. Vigorous representations to the Government led, however, to an increased grant to the Society's college, and to the district scholarships being made tenable there as well as at the Islamia College, and October, 1914, saw an entry of twenty-seven freshmen, eight of them being Mohammedans. Though no baptisms took place from among the students, yet there was evidence that the Bible teaching was making an impression. One man remarked, "In this college we are all to some extent Christians"; and another on leaving obtained permission to address a few words to his fellow students at a farewell tea, and said, "I want to tell you what I have learnt in this college; it is this, that I cannot be a Moslem unless I am first a Christian, and that I must believe in the perfect purity of Christ." The student used the word "Moslem," i.e. a man at peace with God, not "Mussulman."

Impression made by Bible teaching

The C.M.S. High Schools in the province number three. One of the Mohammedan boys at the Edwardes School at Peshawar was baptized in 1914, and a Hindu lad was under preparation for baptism, while the wife of a master who was baptized a year or two ago, a woman who bitterly opposed his conversion, offered herself as a candidate for baptism. Concerning many of the boys it is said that "Christian principles are making themselves evident in lives that as yet are not wholly Christ's." The importance of this school is seen by a consideration of the positions to which former pupils have attained. The Rev. H. J. Hoare, who was in charge of it for some nineteen years, writes:—

High Schools

"Christian principles are making themselves evident"

> The highest commissioned rank in the Indian Army which the private soldier can rise to, the most responsible appointment in the Frontier Political Service, and the office of Divisional Judge have been filled by old boys of the school. The first Indian officer to reach the legations at the relief of Peking side by side with a British officer was an old pupil who had done brilliantly in university examinations and whom I had persuaded to enlist in the ranks. On East African and Nigerian railways; in British Consulates and Political Agencies; as officers in the Police and Intelligence Branch, hunting down outlaws or checking sedition; whether doing plague duty, or stopping gun-running in the Persian Gulf, or toiling over snowy passes with a relief column—they have loyally served the Government they were taught to love. These are national assets of the first importance.[1]

Important positions held by old mission schoolboys

The high school at Bannu has about 350 boys in its secondary department. The school team won the hockey trophy in the provincial tournament, and got into the final round in the football competition. Concerning the spiritual work in the school Dr. R. J. H. Cox says :—

> After preaching to the out-patients at the hospital I dash off to the school for my Scripture period, and there I find, instead of a crowd of bigoted, ignorant men, a class of keen, eager boys who will listen to the Gospel message and take it in. One feels certain that the Word is falling into good ground and is sinking in and must bring forth fruit. We see and know it does, for our boys, in morals and behaviour, at any rate, are far higher up than others in the district. But the effect is going deeper than mere morals, we are sure.

The time of the missionaries in the province is so fully occupied at the schools and hospitals that little other evangelistic work is possible. No baptisms are recorded, excepting those at Peshawar which have been mentioned, but at that station a low-caste Hindu, taught by his Christian master, an official, was admitted to the catechumenate, his master bringing him to the church service in his motor car [1]; while at Dera Ismail Khan a man, his mother, and his fiancée asked for baptism.

Pastoral work

The Bannu Christians maintain the bazaar preaching on Sundays, and the pastorate committee undertakes the sale of Bibles and religious books, and twice in 1914 arranged for a series of lectures and addresses to Christians and non-Christians by special speakers from the Punjab. The European community at Dera Ismail Khan, though not large enough to have a chaplain, subscribes annually about Rs 1100 for the support of the Society's work at the station.

IV. BALUCHISTAN

A vast country with a sparse population

Two conspicuous features of Baluchistan are the vastness of the country and the sparseness of its population. As the last census report put it, "So vast is the province, that if the British Isles, including the Channel Islands, were dumped down in it there would still be room for some 13,000 square miles of sea. Yet its population falls short of the births of the British Isles for a single year, being but 834,703 all told." Quetta, the only city in the province and the head-quarters of the C.M.S. work, contains a cosmopolitan population, and a short time ago the church committee consisted of a Pathan, a Chinaman, a Marathi, a Gujerati, a Punjabi, a man from the United Provinces, another from Delhi, and the chairman, an Englishman. One advantage of this mixture of races is that the fear of relatives and friends, one of the great obstacles to Indians acknowledging Christ openly, is largely removed, and baptisms from among the better classes are more common than at some stations.[2] Work among those classes is carried on by means of the Indian Y.M.C.A., which has some non-Christian associates. A hostel, with a reading room and a club, has been started for their benefit, and in this about twenty-five lectures on various religious, social, and scientific subjects were delivered in 1914. One practical result was the opening of a night school for the depressed classes by some of the high-caste associates. Among the lower castes a mass movement of the same character as that in the Punjab seems to be in progress, for when the census was taken several hundred more Indians claimed to be Christians than were on the church rolls. A couple of mission halls, to serve also as schools, have been opened in order to facilitate work among these people, who number between 3000 and 4000. In doing this some difficulties were met with at the hands of a government official, while great unwillingness was shown by the authorites to forward work in the Kalat State. The Rev. A. D. Dixey says:—

Indians open a school for the depressed classes

> Some fruit of the itinerating work of past years in the Kalat State was shown in an old Baluch farmer and his family asking for baptism. Nothing, however, can at present be done in such a case, since, if baptized, a man cannot remain in the State, and removal from the old life has been proved by experience to be unsatisfactory.

A Baluch farmer seeks baptism

The Christians at Quetta increased their contributions by some hundreds of rupees, and several busy men among them rendered much help in connexion with the Y.M.C.A., while the work of the church committee steadily developed.

Pastoral work

The fees received at the mission hospital in 1914 amounted to Rs 11,600, and there was an increased sale of Christian books, chiefly gospels. Many of the patients had travelled from distant regions for treatment, and there were more women among them than in previous years. Through the influence of the Indian assistant doctor, a sayyid of good family was led to a diligent study of a Persian New Testament, with the result that during the latter part of Ramadan, he refused to keep the fast, regarding it as useless to do so unless there was a change of heart.

V. SINDH

The Society's staff in Sindh was painfully small in 1914, Haidarabad being left without a resident C.M.S. missionary and having to be superintended from Karachi; while in the whole of North Sindh, where only the C.M.S. and C.E.Z.M.S. are at work, and which contains a population of 1,300,000, the C.M.S. had but one ordained man, an Indian, and a few native agents. Lately, however, reinforcements have been sent. The evangelistic work is difficult to compass, but some itinerations were made in North Sindh during the cold weather, in the course of which forty-seven villages were visited, and 572 gospels were sold. A reading room and bookshop were opened at Sukkur, the expenses being borne by the Indian congregation. A young man, whose brother is a Christian, was baptized at that station, and two Mohammedans and a Hindu were under regular instruction. Though the day of ingathering has not yet arrived in Sindh, yet there is some evidence of "an under-current of sentiment running strongly in the direction of Christianity."

Medical work

The temporary hospital at Shikarpur, for the endowment of which the late Seth Hiranand, the Hindu banker who built it, left a lakh of rupees by will, was open for six weeks at the beginning of 1914. During that time there were 7800 new cases, and more than 2000 operations were performed by Dr. H. T. Holland of Quetta, who is responsible for the work, and his colleagues. About 1500 gospels were sold to the patients, and on some days as many as eight services were held.[1]

Karachi High School

The High School at Karachi, connected with which are two branch schools for Sindhi and Gujerati boys respectively, now has 400 names on its roll, as compared with 300 a year or two ago, and the number would be larger were there more accommodation. The school is growing from the bottom; the upper classes are still rather small, and there are but few candidates for matriculation. Plague was severe in the city, but 300 of the masters and boys were inoculated, and there was little mortality among the lads.

WESTERN INDIA MISSION

PAST HISTORY

For fifty years after Bombay became a British possession the English had neither church nor chaplain in the city, and it was not till a century later still that any effort was made for the evangelization of its inhabitants. The first Protestant missionaries, agents of the American Board of Foreign Missions, arrived in 1813. It was in 1820 that the C.M.S. work was inaugurated in Bombay by the Rev. Richard Kenney. The operations of the Society there have been very limited, but in 1832 the work was extended to Nasik; Junnar was occupied in 1843; Malegam, 1848; Aurangabad, 1860; Poona, 1882; and Manmad, 1901.

The diocese of Bombay was formed in 1835. The present bishop is Dr. Palmer, who was consecrated in 1908.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

Eight stations are occupied by European missionaries (of whom there are 18 clergymen, 15 wives, and 9 single women on the list) in the Western India Mission.

The institutions in the Mission consist of the Robert Money School for boys and Emmanuel School, a high school for Christian girls, in Bombay; at Poona, to the south-east, a divinity school, and St. Helena's School (a high school for Parsi girls); at Nasik, which lies to the north-east of Bombay, St. George's School, an Anglo-vernacular school for boys; and at Sinnar, south-east of Nasik, and at Manmad and Malegam to the north-east, middle schools for boys. At Sharanpur, a Christian village outside Nasik, there are orphanages and a middle school, as also at Aurangabad, about one hundred miles east of Nasik. There are hostels in Bombay, Poona, and Aurangabad.

Special efforts are made to reach the Mohammedans in Aurangabad; and itinerating work is carried on from Manmad, rather to the north-west, and also from some of the other stations. Decided movements towards Christianity are in progress in some parts of the Mission. The work among the Bhīls has lately (April 1915) been transferred from the Central Provinces Mission to the Western India Mission. The Z.B.M.M., which has stations at Bombay, Manmad, Nasik, and Panchgani, does most of the work among the women, but the C.M.S. has some zenana work at Aurangabad. The Indian clergymen, 11 in number, are responsible for the oversight of most of the 5160 Indian Christians. There are also 202 Indian Christian lay agents.

The following are the members of the Bombay Corresponding Committee for 1915: the Bishop of Bombay, Mr. A. H. S. Aston, Mr. F. J. Clark, Sir H. E. E. Procter, Mr. W. L. Weldon, and the Revs. Canon D. L. Joshi, C. W. Thorne, and Canon R. S. Heywood (secretary).

Marathi language school

THE Marathi inter-denominational language school at Poona was made use of by a good many more missionaries in 1914 than in the previous year, the students numbering forty-two, and representing fifteen different societies. Besides instruction in the language, they had lectures on such subjects as Comparative Religion, Indian Law as affecting Christian Converts, Indian Etiquette, and Book-keeping. The school served a good purpose not only in thus preparing a number of missionaries for their future work, but also in promoting unity and sympathy between them.

Union High School

The Union High School at Poona gained an influx of pupils, bringing the number up to about 170, when the results of the matriculation examination of Bombay University were published, and it was seen that seven boys had proved successful. The school received a government grant for the first time. The school committee, representing the three societies, those of the Church of Scotland and the United Free Church and the C.M.S., which co-operate to maintain the school, have taken over a private primary school to act as a feeder to the high school.

Four vernaculars used in the Mission

The organization of the distinctively C.M.S. work is complicated by the fact that it is carried on in four different vernaculars, while there is a certain amount of English work as well. Marathi is used at each station, while in Bombay work is carried on in Gujerati also, at Aurangabad in Hindustani, and at Poona in Tamil. Hence it follows that the missionaries and Indian pastors cannot freely be transferred from one station to another according to the exigencies of the work; their movements are restricted by the language which they speak and that which is required.

Literary work

Literary work was accomplished in two of the languages just mentioned. In Marathi, Canon D. L. Joshi was engaged in translating the Books of Jeremiah and Lamentations, and the Rev. E. H. M. Waller's Commentary on the Apocalypse, and, in conjunction with the Rev. D. A. Yardi, he edited an Anglo-Marathi monthly magazine, the "Dharmadipika." The circulation of this magazine has been affected by the war to such an extent that it is now published in English only. The Rev. D. P. K. Shindé translated a Commentary on St. John's Epistles by the Bishop of Assam into Marathi. In Gujerati the Revs. A. I. Birkett and L. Hari revised the new translation of the Prayer Book on which they have been engaged of late years.

Divinity School

Robert Money School

In St. Matthew's Divinity School at Poona the only class was one of six students preparing to act as senior readers. Besides the usual subjects they studied Indian music, both vocal and instrumental, with a view to its use in evangelistic work. The Robert Money School in Bombay, an Anglo-vernacular high school, has been considerably enlarged during the last two years, but owing to increasing numbers and fresh government requirements the seven class rooms which have been added to the building are not enough. A certain number of non-Christian boys were admitted to the new Christian hostel spoken of in last year's Report [1]; some of them were closely related to the Prime Minister of the Nizam of Haidarabad, two were the sons of a deputy commissioner in the Central Provinces, and another was the son of a begum in Bombay. In the past, but few baptisms have been recorded as fruit of the work in the school, but in 1914 four former pupils, who were first attracted to Christianity while in the school, were baptized; one of them had been kept waiting for some months until he attained his majority, since his father was opposed to his change of faith. St. Helena's School, at Poona, shared the experience of the Money School, in that its premises became too strait for it owing to its growth. The school is a mixed one, boys slightly predominating. Twenty-seven of the pupils sat for public examinations, and all were successful, one of them passing the matriculation examination. There are nine middle schools for boys in the Mission. The number of boys on the roll of St. George's School, Nasik, rose from 109 to 193, and the school is now almost self-supporting, only costing the Society Rs 9 per mensem. Caste barriers between the lads are gradually breaking down, and at a feast for the boys and their friends Hindus sat down with their Mohammedan and Christian companions, the food being cooked by Brahmans—a remarkable event in such a bigoted Hindu city. A few Hindus are received as boarders at the Orphanage School, at Sharanpur, a suburb of Nasik, and one of them was baptized in 1914. The Industrial Class at Sharanpur, which is now quite distinct from the orphanage, and in connexion with which there is a hostel for apprentices, with about twelve inmates, received a government grant for the first time, but the expense of the carriage of goods (Sharanpur is six miles and a half from a railway station) combined with other causes to make it difficult for the class to be self-supporting.

St. Helena's School

St. George's School

Industrial Class

There are several hostels in the Mission in addition to those connected with some of the institutions which have been mentioned. St. Matthew's Hostel at Poona is mainly for young C.M.S. teachers studying in the government training college and for the C.M.S. boys belonging to the Union High School, but a couple of Mohammedan boys were admitted, and one of them was led to faith in Christ in 1914, and confessed Him publicly. A new Converts' Home was opened in Bombay, to which about thirty men were admitted for longer or shorter periods, among them the Robert Money boys whose baptism has already been reported. Many were brought through the efforts of two Brahmans, one of them himself a new convert, and one of the mission agents, who, Canon Joshi says, "literally followed our Lord's command to 'constrain them to come in.'" Fourteen of the inmates were baptized, including seven Brahmans, two Marathas, a Mohammedan, and a Parsi.

A new converts' home

The leading institution in the Mission for the education of girls is Emmanuel School, in Bombay, which was raised to the standard of a high school in 1914. The attached hostel, which has about thirty inmates, is for Christians, but non-Christians are in the majority among the day girls, especially in the vernacular classes. There are middle schools for girls connected with the Orphanages at Aurangabad and Sharanpur. Weaving is taught at Aurangabad and a needleroom is carried on at Sharanpur for the benefit of former inmates. A compound at the Aurangabad Orphanage is now utilized as a women's hostel, in which young women exposed to great temptation are received, and helped to lead a respectable life. The Victoria School at Nasik has been transferred to the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

Evangelistic work

The need of a larger staff was clearly shown in connexion with the evangelistic work. In Bombay, although many societies are represented, there is no medical mission; work among Mohammedans is very feebly prosecuted, as are direct efforts to win the educated classes; while the social service work in the city is entirely in the hands of non-Christians. Junnar, where two European missionaries once resided, now has not even an Indian lay agent; while for Khed and the surrounding district, covering about 2000 square miles, and containing a large number of prosperous villages, there is but one Indian clergyman, who has a solitary catechist to help him. Still a good deal of success was met with and there is some extension to be recorded. Nearly 150 persons were baptized in the Manmad district, and happily it proved possible to supply each village containing Christians with a teacher-evangelist. One of these new converts was a Maratha, but most of them were Mahars.[1] A spirit of inquiry is shown by the latter, but the Marathas are greatly under the influence of the Brahmans, and as yet are but little touched by the Gospel; it is said, however, that there is a movement among some of them to throw off the Brahman yoke, and this may result in greater readiness on their part to listen to the teaching of the Christian workers. The movement in the Nasik district, which was described in last year's Report,[2] does not appear to have spread in any marked degree, save in the Sinnar district, where considerable ingatherings took place in 1914. Among those baptized was a man who as a boy had attended a mission school at Igatpuri, and was found still to remember what he had there been taught about the Saviour.[3] The Tamil work at Poona resulted in eight adult baptisms,[4] and the Gujerati work in Bombay in five.

A good many inquirers came forward in the Bulsar district, not far from Bombay, and a few of them were baptized. They have shown great eagerness that their neighbours should be taught, and in three different villages have offered houses for the use of the

[1] The Mahars are the residue of a number of aboriginal tribes. They are considered untouchable by all castes of standing, but modern means of locomotion have led to their proximity being tolerated to an extent formerly unheard of. They are hereditary village servants, and are regarded as authorities in all boundary matters. Their social position is improving. The Marathas are supposed to be the descendants of the ancient Kshatriyas. Their hereditary calling is that of warriors, but now they are husbandmen, landowners, or state servants.

Mission. In the Khed district a catechist was placed at Mahalungi; and a new out-station was opened at Pali, in the Aurangabad district, in which about two dozen adults were baptized. Work among Mohammedans is carried on at Aurangabad, and resulted in two converts openly confessing Christ in baptism and in a number of inquirers coming forward. Meetings, often followed by spirited discussions, were held and several tracts were issued in Urdu.

New out-stations

Work among Moslems

In various ways the endeavour was made to help the converts. Their spiritual welfare was cared for as far as the supply of agents permitted, and sundry industries, such as weaving in Bombay, were taught and maintained in order to provide for their temporal needs. Some special services were held at Igatpuri, in the Nasik district; and at Aurangabad, on the occasion of a visit from Bishop and Mrs. Palmer, the latter held a meeting for women at which a branch of the "Indian Christian Women's Friendly Society," an amalgam of the Mothers' Union and the Girls' Friendly Society, was formed and thirty-six members were enrolled. A great improvement was witnessed in many of the Christians; some who once were unable to resist the temptation to work as usual in the fields on Sunday gave up the custom, and found, so they said, that instead of being poorer in consequence, they were better off. The change in them attracts the attention of the non-Christian officials, and they marvel at it. One Sunday, a superintendent of police, visiting a village, found that the people had not been to service. Inquiring as to the reason he was told that the preacher was away and they were awaiting his return. But this did not satisfy the superintendent. He made the Christians ring the bell, and bade one of them to conduct prayers, for he knew that their good behaviour depended on their religion, and he was afraid lest they should grow slack. Another incident, illustrating the genuineness of the faith of some but lately won from heathenism, is described by the Rev. C. W. Thorne of Aurangabad as follows :—

Non-Christian officials marvel at the change in the Christians

Steadfast faith of new converts

In September there was a great outbreak of cholera in a village some six miles from here. The heathen were filled with terror and prepared a great sacrifice to the cholera goddess. Besides quantities of fowls, eggs, coco-nuts, much ghul (raw sugar), butter, ghee, and other gifts were brought to appease her wrath. In addition to this a buffalo was brought and its head struck off that its blood might propitiate the goddess, while a great sacrifice of thirty-two goats was offered upon her altar. But in spite of all this the scourge broke out again with greater virulence, and the people died like flies. One reason for the great mortality was that, having made such offerings to the deity, the stricken people dared not take any medicine or remedies of any kind, for fear of angering her still further. But while all these fearful scenes were being enacted the little band of Christians stood firm and utterly refused to participate in any way in the idolatrous rites. Neither were their minds filled with superstitious terror like that of their heathen neighbours. God had called them by His grace into the Kingdom of Christ, they said, and He would protect them. And He did. Out of the whole of the little Christian community, numbering some thirty persons, not one was attacked, but all were kept in perfect peace and in physical safety. And yet these were only converts of a year old. Had the cholera outbreak occurred twelve months before, they would have been found trembling with fear and dancing with the maddest of the goddess's devotees. What a wonderful power is the grace of God in the heart and life! Here were heathen men and women who all their lives had been full of superstition and terror, afraid of demons, and terrified by their gods, in one short year brought to a childlike peace and trust in Jesus. Nor were the heathen unaffected by the change. During the epidemic, prayer was made several times in the day by the assembled Christians, and the others came that they might have a share in the benefit. The heathen generally were so much amazed at the faith and joy of the Christians under trial that they said, "Now nothing remains for us to do but to become like you and serve the Lord Jesus."

Superstitious fears removed

On the whole there was much cause for thankfulness in the lives of the converts, but unhappily there were instances in which they did not commend their profession. Many of them are uneducated and very ignorant, and vice and superstition prevail among some of these. Several converts from Islam, too, reverted to their old religion, and great grief was occasioned by the sad fall of one of the Indian pastors. The Bishop of Bombay appointed a commission to inquire into the charges which were made, and the pastor, being found guilty, was deposed from his office.

Use of Indian music

In connexion with the pastoral work mention may be made of the increasing use by the staff of the Mission of Indian music, which, however it may sound to Westerners, appeals strongly to the people of the country. In Bombay an Indian music class has been set on foot among the members of the Marathi congregation, and every Sunday one hymn is sung to an Indian tune. In an itineration in the Manmad district the help of the Rev. D. M. Dhivar, who is an expert player on Indian musical instruments and a composer and singer of Indian music, and whose efforts were seconded by a number of the orphanage boys, was fruitful in gaining attention to the message of the Gospel. Again, a religious teacher, who was once a singer of Hindu songs, but has become an inquirer, now helps in evangelistic work by singing Christian songs. Similar action is reported on the part of a strolling musician, still a non-Christian; he is thought to have learnt the Christian songs from his children, who at one time attended a mission school.

UNITED PROVINCES MISSION

PAST HISTORY

The Society's first agent in India was stationed in the United Provinces. He was an Indian, Abdul Masih, Henry Martyn's solitary convert from Mohammedanism, and he was placed at Agra, under Corrie's auspices, in 1813. Abdul Masih was ordained in 1826 by Bishop Heber, and was the first Indian clergyman of the Church of England. Meerut was occupied in 1815; Benares, 1817; Gorakhpur, 1823; Azamgarh, 1831; Lucknow, 1858; Allahabad and Annfield, 1859; Faizabad, 1862; Aligarh, 1863; and Muttra, 1878. A remarkable work was done by W. Smith and C. B. Leupolt at Benares, which began in 1832. In 1853, St. John's College at Agra was opened as a high school by T. V. French (subsequently Bishop of Lahore) and E. C. Stuart (subsequently Bishop of Waiapu, and afterwards in Persia). The Sepoy Mutiny of 1857 destroyed much of the Society's property, but the deep interest aroused caused a great extension of the work. Lucknow was occupied immediately on its reconquest, on the invitation of the Chief Commissioner, Sir R. Montgomery. Allahabad was also occupied, and Christian villages were established there and at Gorakhpur. In 1892 a new diocese (Lucknow) was formed for Oudh and the Jhansi Division of the United Provinces, the Bishop (Dr. A. Clifford, previously a C.M.S. missionary at Calcutta) having also, by consensual jurisdiction, episcopal supervision over the remainder of the United Provinces. Dr. Clifford retired in 1909, and was succeeded by Canon G. H. Westcott. In 1903 another new diocese (Nagpur), with Dr. Eyre Chatterton as bishop, was formed, including the Central Provinces and Rajputana, and certain 'assigned districts' of Haidarabad.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

I. The C.M.S. has ten chief stations in the province of Agra. They may be regarded as forming three groups, namely, Allahabad, Benares, and Gorakhpur, in the south-east of the province; Agra, Muttra, Aligarh, Bulandshahr, and Meerut, in the west; and Mussourie and Annfield, in the hills to the north-west.

The educational institutions include a divinity school and the Oxford and Cambridge Hostel for students at Allahabad; St. John's College and Collegiate School, with a number of hostels, at Agra; St. Andrew's College and High School at Gorakhpur; high schools for boys at Benares (Jay Narayan's School), Jaunpur, and Meerut; a girls' normal school at Benares; the Queen Victoria High School for Christian girls and St. John's Girls' School at Agra; and orphanages and industrial schools at Benares and Sikandra; besides the King Edward Memorial School at Lakhauti, and a number of middle and elementary schools.

Itinerating is carried on among the numerous villages, notably those in the plains around Allahabad, Agra, Aligarh, and Meerut.

II. In the province of Oudh there are two stations, viz., Lucknow and Faizabad (which is under the Indian Church Council). A boys' high school is carried on at Lucknow, and also a school for purdah girls. Special attention is given to evangelistic work among Mohammedans in Lucknow, and tours are made in the villages of that and of the Faizabad and Sultanpur districts.

Medical work in the Mission is almost entirely in the hands of the Z.B.M.M., which has hospitals at Benares, Jaunpur, Lucknow, and Patna, and also engages in women's work at Bulandshahr, Gorakhpur, etc., in close co-operation with the C.M.S. The latter society has women missionaries working in the zenanas at many of the stations.

The staff of the Mission consists of 27 European and 13 Indian clergymen, 6 laymen, 17 wives of missionaries, 32 single women and 174 Indian Christian lay agents.

The following are the members of the Allahabad Corresponding Committee for 1915: The Bishop of Lucknow, Archdeacon P. H. Chapman, Hon. Justice

Sir G. E. Knox, Hon. Mr. Justice E. Chamier, Mr. E. G. Hill, Mr. C. Sands, and the Revs. A. W. Davies, F. W. Hinton, W. L. W. Kitching, C. G. Mylrea, and A. J. Harvey (secretary).

Language school

TWENTY-TWO missionary societies were represented among the students at the united language school at Lucknow, at which instruction was given in Hindi and Urdu. In consequence of the war the school was closed for the winter of 1914–15.

Financial help by Europeans

In some parts of the Mission considerable financial help is rendered by Europeans. Every year a sale of work is held for the benefit of the C.M.S. at Lucknow, while the branch of the Gleaners' Union at the station raises about Rs 250 by means of boxes, and supports a catechist in the district as well as a Bible woman to work in the zenanas. The annual C.M.S. collection at All Saints', Mussourie, amounted in 1914 to Rs 419, a larger sum than ever before.

Deaths of Rev. T. Noah,

The Rev. T. Noah, Indian pastor at Faizabad, died on 5 March, 1914. He was ordained in 1893, and stationed first at Katni Murwara in the Central Provinces, and later at Lucknow and Faizabad in Oudh.

Rev. J. B. Ventura,

Another Indian pastor, the Rev. J. B. Ventura, of Lucknow, passed away on September 6. After his ordination in 1897 he worked at Allahabad, whence he was transferred to Muirabad, and afterwards to Lucknow.

Rev. A. E. Johnson

Another death which has to be chronicled is that of the Rev. A. E. Johnston, which occurred at Dublin on 20 May, 1915. After taking high honours at Trinity College, Dublin, he sailed for the United Provinces Mission in 1888, and was stationed first at Allahabad and then at Benares, Ill-health drove him home in 1898 and subsequently obliged him to resign. He rejoined in 1913, only to be compelled in January of the following year again to return to England.

Rev. A. Medland,

Two former workers in the Mission have also been called to their rest. The Rev. A. Medland, who died at Clifton on 9 March, 1915, in his ninetieth year, sailed for India in 1854. He was stationed with Mrs. Medland at Meerut at the outbreak of the mutiny in May, 1857, and was conducting service in the mission chapel when a messenger rushed in with the news that the sepoys had risen, were murdering all Europeans, and were advancing towards the chapel. Mr. and Mrs. Medland had a very narrow escape, and lost everything except their lives. He retired in 1861.

and Miss S. Bland

The death of Miss S. Bland occurred at Hampstead on 3 July, 1914, shortly after her resignation was accepted by the Committee. She went to India under the Female Education Society in 1875, and when that society was dissolved she, with a number of other missionaries, joined the C.M.S. Her work throughout her residence in India lay in the primary schools for girls at Agra. She received the Kaisar-i-Hind medal for "public service."

The Committee have accepted the resignations of the Revs. J. N. Carpenter and W. McLean, after twenty-four years' work; the Rev. J. A. F. Warren, after twenty-two years' work; Miss E. Bedford, after twenty-three years' work; and Miss E. A. Luce.

Literary work

Canon W. Hooper served on a committee charged with the revision of the Hindi Old Testament, and translated into that language Dr. Weitbrecht's "Commentary on St. Matthew"; he also published a book of sixteen sermons on the Scriptural emblem of the Holy Spirit. Canon S. Nihal Singh wrote some Hindi handbills; and the Rev. N. H. Tubbs prepared some notes on St. Mark's Gospel for use in mission high schools.

I. PROVINCE OF AGRA

Educational work

Divinity School

THERE was only one class at the Divinity School at Allahabad in 1914, namely, of eight men reading for the junior catechists' certificate, but in September a candidate for ordination entered. Two reasons are assigned for the shortage of numbers: (1) the smallness of the staff, which has led to a reduction of the classes, so that in some cases, when men have come forward as candidates for training, for ordination, or for one of the catechists' classes, they have been refused admission because the class which they wished to join did not exist; and (2) the lack of anything like general or deep evangelistic zeal in the Indian Church. A Training School for village agents is held at Sikandra, but there is a difficulty in getting the right type of candidate.

Oxford and Cambridge Hostel

A selfish spirit

Of the 105 students at the Oxford and Cambridge Hostel at Allahabad, one is a Parsi, two are Christians, and the remainder Hindus. Notwithstanding the more liberal spirit discernible among the educated classes of India, caste distinctions are still rigidly observed by the men. An attempt was made to induce the hostellers to carry on a night school, and for a brief period it met with success, albeit at the meeting held to float the scheme the only reason adduced for engaging in social work was the satisfaction and reflex blessing it would bring. In contrast to this selfish spirit was the action of Mr. H. C. Joyce, one of the short service men helping at the hostel, in sharing for a fortnight the isolation of a student who was suffering from smallpox. Although opposed to Christianity as a foreign religion, many of the men read the Bible with the warden, and several testimonies were received from former hostellers as to the help which their life in the institution had been in the formation of character.

St. John's College

A few years ago the University of Allahabad included in its curriculum a two years' course in commerce, designed to furnish men with such a knowledge as would enable them to rise to important and responsible positions in the commercial world, and decided to grant certificates to those students who should pass the examination at the end of the course. St. John's College, Agra, applied in 1914 for affiliation in the subject, and in July the classes for the commercial certificate examination were opened with four men. The new commerce section was provided with the necessary building and its furniture without cost to the Society, save for a grant from the college funds, the money being contributed by private friends or by the Government, which has been most liberal in its help. This new venture is connected with the university, and is quite distinct from the College Commercial Training Institute, as the old commercial department, which was founded in 1902, is called. The latter has largely increased its usefulness during the last six years and has more than doubled its fee income. One student in the commercial department asked for special instruction with a view to baptism. He first heard the Gospel from a missionary of the London Missionary Society in the streets of Benares, and afterwards became a pupil in Jay Narayan's School in that city, and was outcasted by his parents because of his leanings to Christianity. Some special meetings were conducted for the college students by the new Bishop of Assam just before his consecration in December; and throughout the year the members of the staff, both Christians and non-Christians, met once a fortnight for religious discussion.[1]

New commercial classes

Outcasted because of leanings to Christianity

B.A. classes formed at St. Andrew's College

The status of St. Andrew's College, Gorakhpur, is being raised to that of a first grade college by the formation of B.A. classes, and large government grants have been given for the necessary buildings. The college had sixty-four students in 1914, all of them non-Christians and most of them Hindus. Some indications of a striving after a higher life were seen among them. The debating society is popular, and it is interesting, as showing the trend of student opinion, to note that the men expressed their belief in vegetarianism for humanitarian reasons, regarded female education as desirable, and thought that primary education should be compulsory, the purdah be retained, oriental dress be worn, early marriages be discontinued, and English be the medium of communication in business.

St. John's School

The leading High School in the Mission is St. John's School at Agra, the head master of which has retired on pension after some forty years' service, and has been awarded the Kaisar-i-Hind silver medal by the Government. There are nearly 600 boys in the school, more than two-thirds of the number being Hindus, and many had to be refused admission because of insufficient accommodation. The boys in the tenth class, which answers to the sixth form in English schools, were obviously attracted to Christianity, and ready, even anxious, to take Christ as their ideal and teacher, but they were lacking in any sense of sin and, consequently, of their need of a Saviour. One of the senior Mohammedan boys, inspired by St. John's Girls' School, organized and kept going a school for Mohammedan girls, and he proceeded to form an association with over fifty members, most of them belonging to St. John's School, which plans to establish twenty girls' schools in the city. A district, twenty-two miles wide and ten miles long, with a large village population, has been assigned to the school, in order to interest the Christian boys in village evangelization. It has been placed under the charge of the Rev. Dina Nath, a high-caste Brahman by birth, who, however, is much more proud of being a Christian. He has gathered round him a number of Indian Christians, and he goes with one or two of them into the villages, without tents or any of the paraphernalia inevitable for the European, to live the simple life among the people and preach the Gospel to them. A new hostel for Jay Narayan's School, Benares, was begun in the spring, but after a few months building operations had to be suspended because of the outbreak of war and the consequent desirability of avoiding all but absolutely necessary expenditure. The first convert from the high school at Meerut was baptized in 1914, and the high schools at Azamgarh and Jaunpur obtained excellent results in the Scripture examination of the Missionary Educational Union. In April, 1915, the Azamgarh school, together with the other work at that station, was handed over to the Australian Wesleyan Methodists. Among the boys' Middle Schools the only one which calls for special mention is that at Aligarh, where a new hostel for Hindus was opened, which at once became self-supporting. The Industrial School at Sikandra had more boys than in 1913. For the first time for some years the press made a profit, and the carpentry and weaving departments reduced their deficits. Industrial work, however, is not popular. As one of the senior apprentices remarked, "An artisan on high pay gets less honour than a clerk on low pay."

The title "normal school" is given to a girls' middle school at Benares, in which there are two Normal Classes, one Anglo-vernacular, and the other, opened during the year under review, vernacular. Seven members of the former passed out with the government certificate. These classes have between them eighteen students. The normal classes at the Queen Victoria High School at Agra are smaller than those at the middle school, two girls being in the English class and five in the vernacular. Three students sat for the vernacular teachers' certificate examination, and all of them passed, one in the first division. Both the girls from the school who went in for the Allahabad matriculation examination were successful, one gaining a government scholarship; and four of the five who sat for the middle examination passed, one of these also winning a scholarship. The elder girls hold a Sunday school for the children of the servants; many of the first-named took gospels in Urdu and Hindi with them when they left for their summer holidays, and sold them to non-Christian women whom they met at the stations or in the trains.

Middle School

The Middle School at Meerut was full, and for the third year in succession all the girls passed who entered for the Anglo-vernacular middle examination. The middle school at Benares is worked in close connexion with the Girls' Orphanage, where is an industrial class consisting of seven members, which made a profit of some Rs 500 in the year.

Orphanage

Primary schools

There are already many Primary Schools in the Mission, and their number could easily be increased were funds available. They are important evangelistic agencies, and the Rev. J. S. C. Bannerjee, of the Bulandshahr district, where thirteen such schools have been opened in the last three years, says that they do a twofold work.

Their twofold work: (1) winning converts,

There is first their direct work in the form of winning boys and girls for Christ. Eight of the senior boys desired baptism in their hearts, and received the permission of their parents to be baptized, but lacked the courage to confess Christ openly; four others asked for baptism but could not gain the sanction of their parents; and one, after enduring a good deal of opposition and petty persecution, was received into the visible Church.

(2) breaking down caste distinctions

Secondly, the schools are doing an indirect work in serving to break down caste distinctions. When the schools were opened it was a problem how to proceed in view of the impassable walls of division between the different sects of the lower classes. "The shepherds and weavers, the potters, the shoemakers, and the sweepers dread the very shadow of each other," and would not consent that their children should sit in the same room. Eventually, schools were opened for the community that was most forward, and by degrees all the classes, excepting the sweepers, drew closer together. In addition to the village schools there are a number of primary girls' schools in the cities and towns. For example, in Agra the C.M.S. has five schools, containing about 250 girls—a rather smaller number than in 1913 owing to many schools having been opened by the Government and by the Arya Samaj, and to the efforts of the latter to draw the children away from the mission schools. Many of the present and former pupils in the schools at Meerut are Christians at heart, but the fear of man keeps them back.

Schools for daughters of Hindu gentlemen

In response to a request from some Hindu gentlemen, an English school for their daughters was opened at Meerut, to which the name of "Connaught School" was given, and at the end of the year it had nine pupils. The attendance at St. John's Girls' School at Agra, a purdah school for the daughters of leading citizens, fell from thirty to twenty. Once a month a purdah party is held at the school.

Evangelistic work

The opportunities for evangelistic work were as abundant as ever, but a change of method was found necessary in the Aligarh district. The old practice of going from village to village preaching the Gospel had to be abandoned entirely because all the workers —and more than all that were available—were needed to teach the inquirers and converts, who numbered nearly 1000 when the year ended. In one week in November more than 500 persons asked to be instructed for baptism. Nearly 200 adults and 126 children were baptized in the district during the year ending September 30; in the following November ninety-five persons were baptized on the 9th, forty-nine on the 14th, twenty-one on the following day; and the Rev. T. Law wrote about that time that he expected it would take a month to finish all the baptisms in the various muhallas (quarters of the town) and in the villages.[1] Unhappily, there is no immediate prospect of being able to increase the staff of workers in this fruitful field; indeed, since many of them are supported by individual friends in England and Australia, some difficulty is experienced, owing to the war, in keeping the staff at its existing strength. Next to Aligarh in the number of baptisms reported comes Meerut, which lies to the north, and where 186 adults were baptized. These were mostly in the villages, and included eighty Chamars at Jataoli, four miles from Meerut; a similar number belonging to the same community at Anchaoli, twenty miles from Meerut, who had suffered much persecution; thirty-four persons at Rardhna; and twenty sweepers at Sikhera, five miles from Meerut, who were on the point of being baptized twelve years before, but then for some reason were put back. Some Chamar inquirers at another village asked for teachers and for a time seemed to be quite in earnest, but then they gradually "cooled off"; the reason, it was discovered, was that they were disappointed because the missionaries did not insist on the zemindars raising their wages. Between Aligarh and Meerut lies the Bulandshahr district, of which the Rev. J. S. C. Bannerjee, an Indian missionary, is in charge. The first baptisms in the district took place in August, 1914, at a village named Phakaner, where about sixty persons were received into the visible Church, the service being conducted by two Indian and four European clergymen.[2] Many of the neophytes had suffered persecution, and three at least had been so cruelly beaten as to be obliged to spend a month in hospital, while one had his arm broken. These converts were Chamars, but the educated classes are being influenced by means of lectures, visiting, and educational work.

At the other stations in the Mission results were less striking than at those which have been mentioned, but, nevertheless, the outlook at several of them is bright. Even in the villages around Muttra, that stronghold and sacred city of Hinduism, many of the lowest castes were baptized by American missionaries, and some asked the C.M.S. workers for baptism; while, although during a visit paid to a mela at Brindaban strong opposition was experienced at the hands of the masters and boys belonging to a certain school, Miss M. Stratton heard a few months later that one of the masters had been baptized, led to faith in Christ by reading a Bible which had been taken into the school to be lectured against and cavilled at. Little opposition to Christianity was shown at Benares, the reason, according to an Indian, being that the people now understand it, and so cannot oppose. In what is known as the trans-Gangetic field, that is, the district on the other side of the Ganges from Allahabad, visits were paid in the ancient town of Jhusi to the sadhus who live in subterranean rooms, cut out of the solid mud, and completed with solid masonry; two men of this class, after six months' probation, received baptism. Some baptisms are reported from Annfield, and inquirers from Mussourie, but in Azamgarh city general indifference to the Gospel was shown, while at Gorakhpur such inquirers as there were proved disappointing. In the Gorakhpur district almost more than any other, the staff is inadequate. It contains 3,201,180 people, of whom only 1608 are Christians; in other words, there is only one Christian to every 2000 of the population. The C.M.S. European staff consists of six missionaries, most of whom are occupied entirely at St. Andrew's College and high school; the Indian agents of the Society number twenty-four, including the pastor; and the only other Christian workers are eight of the Salvation Army, engaged in social work, and six of the Swedish Baptist Mission; so that all told there is but one Christian worker for every 72,000 of the population. The population, it should be noted, exceeds by about 360,000 that of the whole of the Uganda Protectorate, which has more than one hundred C.M.S. European missionaries, besides about 3000 Protestant African workers. Mr. J. McIntosh worked among the pilgrims from all parts of India, Burma, and Ceylon to the shrines of the Buddha at Kasia, Goraknath, etc., and also itinerated in the north-west of the Gorakhpur district, up to the borders of Nepal, covering 1700 miles, mostly on foot. No European missionary is allowed to enter Nepal, but the Gospel has lately been carried there by a Gurkha soldier, a bandsman, of whom the Rev. J. F. Pemberton writes as follows:—

Only one Christian among every 2000 people

The Gospel carried into Nepal

With his regiment he moved about and came in contact with Christians as well as Hindus and Mohammedans. He learned a little about Christ and also visited some revival meetings in the Khasia Hills of Assam. By this, but more by direct communion, Guman Singh realized the love of Christ. He tells how that one day he had a vision—that he saw Christ and heard His voice. Christ told him to carry the message of salvation to his own people, the Nepalese. He determined to do so when his leave was granted to him. He had to wait several months before his six months' furlough became due. In the meanwhile he gave full proof of his conversion. He preached to his comrades and sought to win them. His zeal and earnestness provoked bitter opposition, and led to heartless persecution. His trials were very severe, and reached a climax when his fellow-soldiers, incensed against him, one day rushed upon him, and, knocking him down, dragged him by the ear a considerable distance along the ground; the ear was almost torn off. Guman Singh's injuries were so severe that he had to be sent into hospital, where he remained in a serious condition for some days. When he had sufficiently recovered to be allowed to talk, the hospital authorities asked him to lodge a complaint against the men who had handled him so roughly and cruelly. This Guman Singh flatly refused to do. He declined to give any information that would lead to the identification of his persecutors.

All his efforts are initiated by himself, and he defrays his own expenses, but he has allied himself to the C.M.S. at Gorakhpur, and holds a letter of commendation from the Bishop of Lucknow.[1] In many parts of the Mission the opposition of the Arya Samaj is pronounced, though in some districts its old, open antagonism has given place to more underhand methods.

Zenana openings

In the zenana work at Azamgarh, Agra, Muttra, Aligarh, and Meerut, numerous openings were met with, and it is said that at Meerut "a mighty work is going on under the surface," and several women are secret believers. An industrial class which was set on foot in that town attracted a fair number of women at first, but after a time the efforts of an Arya Samaj man, who, however, sends his daughters to a C.M.S. and not an Arya school, caused the attendance to dwindle almost to vanishing point.

Pastoral work

The unworthy lives of some of the converts at Aligarh made severe measures necessary, and stress is laid by several workers on the absence of missionary zeal among the Indian Christians, and the great need of an outpouring of the spirit of service. Considerable improvement, however, was seen in the converts at Soron,[2] and in two different villages in the Meerut district men of different castes urged that the sweepers and Chamars should be Christianized, because then "they would become better people" —a cheering testimony to the character of the Indian Christians.

II. PROVINCE OF OUDH

Educational work

THE High School at Lucknow has nearly 400 pupils. A new wing was opened in 1914, the whole cost of which, Rs 20,000, has been met by grants from the Government. The boys collected no less a sum than Rs 230 for the relief of distressed Indians in South Africa. A discussion concerning the Arya Samaj having arisen in the school magazine, a public meeting was held to thrash the matter out, an Indian clergyman of the American Methodist Mission being chosen as the Christian champion. The Lal Bagh School, a middle school, also at Lucknow, has about one hundred names on its roll. Twenty-five girls, a marked advance on the number in 1913, attended the Purdah School.

Evangelistic work

The Arya Samaj was active in its opposition to the Christian workers both in the city of Lucknow and at the melas in the district. They are the most bitter enemies the Mission has to deal with; when they get wind of any inquirer asking for baptism they move heaven and earth to turn him from his purpose, and they have even succeeded in causing converts to renounce their Christian profession and return to them. The bazaar work appeared to be destitute of results, and the preachers were inclined to "get into ruts," but "to preach day after day while seeing little or no result requires a very high level of faith and spirituality." Through the work at Faizabad, which is under the Indian Church Council, eleven persons of the servants' class were baptized, and a school teacher, a Kalwar by caste, was baptized at Sultanpur, after being confined in a house in the town for two days by the Arya Samaj. The people in the villages of the Faizabad district listened well to the Gospel. Many of them had never heard of the Saviour, and one woman, in answer to a question whether she knew the true guru, Jesus Christ, asked, "Where does He live?"

CENTRAL PROVINCES AND RAJPUTANA MISSION

PAST HISTORY

The Central Provinces of India, together with Rajputana and the other native States known as Central India, were formed into the diocese of Nagpur in 1903, the first bishop, Dr. Eyre Chatterton, being consecrated on March 25 of that year. The Society's work, which is carried on in the Central Provinces, Rajputana, and Gujerat, was severed from that in the United Provinces and placed under a separate committee in the same year. Jabalpur, the oldest of the C.M.S. stations in the diocese, was occupied in 1855; Katni Murwara in 1899; and Bharatpur (in Rajputana) in 1902. Among the Gonds, Mandla (1879), Marpha (1892), Patpara (1897), Sukulpura (1901), and Deori (1909) are the stations; and among the Bhīls, Kherwara, in Rajputana (1880), and Biladia and Lusadia, in the Bombay Presidency (1901).

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The Mission is carried on in four sections: among Hindus and Mohammedans in the Central Provinces (I) and also in Rajputana (II); and among people of animistic cults—the Gonds (III), and the Bhīls (IV).

I. and II. At Jabalpur and Katni Murwara (Map 10), in the Central Provinces, and at Bharatpur (Map 11), 300 miles from the former and within some thirty miles of Agra, but situated in Rajputana, the work is mainly among Hindus, and is carried on by means of a high school, a middle school, and a hostel for Christian boys at Jabalpur, an Anglo-vernacular school at Bharatpur, and several vernacular schools; and by evangelistic efforts in the villages. The women's work at Jabalpur and Katni Murwara is, for the most part, in the hands of missionaries of the C.E.Z.M.S.

III. The Gonds, an aboriginal tribe, are reached from Mandla (where there is also some work among Hindus), Patpara, Deori, Sukulpura, and Marpha, which are in the Central Provinces and within about one hundred miles of Jabalpur (Map 10). A training class for evangelists is held at Mandla, and there are a girls' middle school and orphanages for boys and girls at Patpara.

IV. Another aboriginal tribe, the Bhīls, are found at Kherwara, in Rajputana, and at Biladia and Lusadia, in the Bombay Presidency, villages more than 400 miles west of Jabalpur (Map 10). There are the Thompson Memorial School and an orphanage for boys at Kherwara, and an orphanage for girls at Lusadia, where also catechists are trained and medical work is carried on. The stations in this section of the Mission, though in the diocese of Nagpur, are far more accessible from Bombay than from Jabalpur, and the work at them was transferred in April, 1915, to the Western India Mission.

The Society's staff comprises 9 European and 5 Indian clergymen, 1 layman, 10 missionaries' wives and 7 single women. The Indian Christian lay agents engaged in the Mission number 135.

The following are the members of the Jabalpur Corresponding Committee for 1915: The Bishop of Nagpur, Archdeacon C. Price, Major Plummer, Mr. G. C. Rogers, Capt. C. J. Stones, Mr. A. C. Sells, and the Revs. A. I. Birkett, F. Ll. Bridges, J. Fryer, W. Hodgkinson, and Canon E. A. Hensley (secretary).

A general lament

FROM one Mission after another comes the sad lament that the missionary staff is insufficient to compass the work and take advantage of the opportunities which present themselves, and the Central Provinces Mission joins in the general chorus. At Jabalpur, where at one time the C.M.S. used to have three resident European missionaries, for four months at the end of 1914 and beginning of 1915 there was only one, and he the secretary of the Mission. This meant that in addition to his office duties Canon E. A. Hensley was responsible for the superintendence of ten schools, with 1400 pupils, and the management of two hostels, one with forty-eight Christian boys of all ages. Moreover he had several other duties to discharge. He is a member of the committee for drawing up a constitution for the synod of the diocese of Nagpur; he is called upon to visit several chaplaincies and preach in behalf of the C.M.S.; he was secretary of the Mid-India Convention, an interdenominational effort, which was held in October, 1914, when 800 Indian Christians gathered together for a series of meetings; and he is secretary of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society's work in the Central Provinces. Again, the Gond Mission has had no male recruit for eleven years, and in March, 1915, there were but two European clergymen and one layman to superintend the work at five stations. The difficulty of arranging for the work is enhanced by the fact that it is carried on in various languages. At Jabalpur, Katni Murwara, and Bharatpur, where the people are Hindus or Mohammedans, the languages are Hindustani and Tamil; among the Gonds the work is mostly in Hindi (though they have a language of their own); and in the Bhīl Mission Gujerati is used. Once more, the position is complicated by the inaccessibility of the Bhīl stations from Jabalpur, which has led to a proposal that they should be transferred to the Western India Mission, since two of them are in the Bombay Presidency, and all are reached with comparative ease from its capital town.

Literary work

The Rev. A. I. Birkett was engaged in the revision of the Gujerati Prayer Book, which was completed as far as the end of the Order for Holy Communion.

I. JABALPUR AND KATNI MURWARA

Pastoral work

THE Tamil congregation at Jabalpur fell off as far as numbers are concerned. A good proportion of the members are domestic servants in European households, and some were thrown out of employment in consequence of the departure of troops for the front, and left the city. The Tamil community, indeed, is in a continual state of flux, since most of the people only visit Jabalpur in search of a living, and many of them, including at times some almost ready for baptism, make only a short stay and leave suddenly.

Evangelistic work

The evangelistic work in the city has in the past been carried on by catechists employed by the C.M.S., but in 1914 it was handed over to the Indian Church, and the catechists were transferred to the district. Tamil pilgrims passing through Jabalpur on their way to Benares received attention, and zenana work was also carried on. As a result of this latter a family of four Tamils—the parents and two daughters—were baptized.[1] Several inquirers came forward at Katni Murwara, and one was received as a catechumen. Work among the depressed classes in the villages in that district was distinctly hopeful.

Educational work

The number of pupils at the High School at Jabalpur has increased, and makes the enlargement of the buildings a pressing necessity. Social service is encouraged among the lads, who raise a poor fund from which to pay the fees of the poorer boys in the school, a committee of boys carefully investigating each case before giving help. Both the hostels, St. Luke's for Christians and St. John's for Hindus and Mohammedans, were full; some of the inmates of the former at times rendered assistance in evangelistic work.[1] The Middle School in the Sadar bazaar was so much overcrowded that a branch primary school had to be opened to relieve the congestion. A school for children of the depressed classes was set on foot at Katni Murwara.

II. BHARATPUR

Pastoral work

THE workers in the city and native State of Bharatpur in Rajputana are fortunate in the sympathy and help which they receive from the English resident officials. These set a good example by their regular attendance at services, and month by month they contribute to the local funds of the C.M.S. The affairs of the Hindustani congregation are managed by a pastorate committee, the members of which conduct the services when the Rev. F. D. O. Roberts is absent from the station. The people are liberal and punctual in their contributions, and spiritual growth was discernible in the lives of several. The missionaries, however, were saddened by the fall of an old and trusted worker, who, though excommunicated, showed no signs of repentance.

A pastorate committee

Educational work

The financial aid given by the European and Indian congregations made it possible to open a couple of schools in Bharatpur for children belonging to the depressed classes. Not children only, but also their parents and other relatives attended, and before the close of the year it was possible to trace a great change in the lives and habits of many. The Arya Samajists opposed the educational work to the utmost of their power, and a Mohammedan moulvi forbade the parents under his influence to send their daughters to a mission school.

The occupation of centres in a native State is compassed with much difficulty, and it is therefore a matter for thankfulness that it has been possible to extend the work by opening an outstation at Bayana, an important railway junction, twenty-five miles from Bharatpur. There was much anxious waiting before mission premises could be obtained, and an exorbitant price had to be paid for them, but a girls' school was at length set on foot, and though the efforts of the Arya Samaj were successful in drawing the children away, another school was soon opened in its stead. Bayana was one of the three centres at which the missionaries stayed during their itineration in the cold weather of 1913–14, in the course of which they realized their ambition to preach the Gospel in each of the ten districts of the Bharatpur State, a task which it has taken three years to accomplish. At one place where some years previously a missionary had been assaulted, the chief invited Mr. Roberts to partake of a feast, and he was able to dispose of twenty gospels. From March to July open-air preaching was maintained in Bharatpur, and then three months were devoted to the villages near at hand. The educated classes of the city were not neglected. A number of state officials, professional men, and others visited the mission house, and some of them attended a Bible class.

III. GOND MISSION

The Gonds

THE head-quarters of the C.M.S. work among the Gonds, an animistic tribe numbering about two and a third millions, who are found only in the Central Provinces and Berar, is at Mandla, the chief town of the district of that name, which contains a population of some 9000.[1] Most of the inhabitants of Mandla, however, are Mohammedans or Hindus, but Gonds predominate at the four other stations of the Society, though the Baigas, once a migratory tribe but now settling down, are also found.[2]

Accessibility of the Gonds

Work has been carried on among the Gonds since 1879, but progress has been slow, and the number of adherents of the Mission is but little more than 800. The people, however, are said now to be very accessible, and in the district around Sukulpura, which was reoccupied in 1914 after the lapse of seven years, and is important as being on the border of the Rewah State, a territory closed to the missionaries, the people crowded round the workers. There was some reason to suppose that they were attracted merely by the novelty of a visit from a European, and when urged to accept salvation through Christ they often replied that they could not forsake the customs of their ancestors, and that their gods would punish them were they to abandon their beliefs. It is not alone at a remote place like Sukulpura that the Gospel is a novelty, for in the villages of the Mandla district it is not uncommon for a woman, when our Lord's name is mentioned, to ask, "Who is Jesus?" A widow was baptized at Patpara and three adults at Marpha, and some inquirers are reported, but it is said that though many are convinced of the truth of the Gospel message, yet they cannot face the cost of breaking with their caste and family ties.

Dispensaries have been established at Patpara, Marpha, and Sukulpura, and attract patients from long distances. About 3000 visits were recorded at the Patpara dispensary, of which the Government shows its appreciation by making a small grant. Dispensaries

Owing to the exertions of the district government officer the Gonds have suddenly conceived a strong desire for education. Advantage has been taken of this as far as possible. Four new schools were opened in the Marpha district in 1914, while in a village near Deori a school for Baigas was set on foot—probably the first to be established for their benefit—and gained a good attendance. Orphanages for boys and girls are maintained at Patpara. Most of them after marriage settle down at Deori, but they find it difficult to succeed in their work. The reasons for this are indicated by the Rev. W. Hodgkinson. He writes :— Educational work New schools Orphanages

It should be borne in mind that in all cases they are very young and inexperienced, they are surrounded by heathen farmers who look upon them with suspicious eyes, and years elapse in some cases before they are taken into confidence and become part and parcel of the village life. They must bear all their difficulties alone, whereas the heathen help each other in their hour of need. If a new house is to be built, for instance, the men will combine and go to the hills, cut the necessary wood, bring it home, and fix it, etc. And the same in all other matters : their united experience and strength are brought to bear, and the work is quickly and satisfactorily done. In the case of the young Christians, however, there is not this fund of experience and strength to draw upon, so that even if they unite they very often fail where the heathen succeed. Again, the latter are generally well established. They have all the household and farming utensils they require, whereas the Christian boys begin with bare necessaries, and even the best of them have to wait for years before they can acquire the less essential equipment. This is often a great cause of failure, for they see the heathen around able to take advantage of every opportunity, while they themselves have to be more or less idle through lack of implements. . . . It has to be remembered that most of the boys have had their constitutions ruined, or very seriously impaired, during the awful days of famine, so that even though they may appear outwardly strong and healthy, they are really weak and unable to work either as long or as hard as the grown-up and healthier heathen around them. The difficulties of young converts

A Christian mela was held at Diwari in the spring of 1914, and was attended by 200 persons from all parts of the district. Most of the Christians, it is said, try to live up to their light, and those at Patpara made a beginning in supporting their pastor. On the other hand it has to be recorded that there were few signs of repentance among the converts who have been excommunicated at Diwari ; while at Sukulpura investigation showed that most of the people baptized there in former years have reverted to heathenism. A Christian mela

IV. BHĪL MISSION

Evangelistic work

THE shortage of workers in the Bhīl Mission, where in 1914 there were but two instead of four ordained missionaries, and where there are no Indian clergymen or trained and experienced Indian lay agents, made it impossible to do much more than hold the ground already gained. An itineration, lasting about six weeks, was indeed undertaken in the Biladia district, and a certain amount of visiting was done in the villages near that station, while in the Lusadia district the simple medical treatment which Miss A. H. R. Bull was able to give was of great assistance in gaining a hearing for the Gospel in the villages. She mentions that the people appear to be less diligent in observing their heathen festivals. Very few adults were baptized. One of the mission servants at Kherwara and his wife were, however, admitted to the catechumenate.

The number of patients in the hospital at Lusadia was greater than in 1913, and many persons received treatment also during the three tours, each lasting for from eight to ten days, which were made by Mr. John Brand, the Indian hospital assistant. This man was the means under God of the conversion of an aged couple who were baptized in 1914. The husband had undergone twenty years penal servitude; he is not, however, thought any the worse of by his neighbours on that account, but is regarded as a travelled and enlightened man! A dispensary is worked at Biladia, and attracts a good many patients, since there is no other hospital or dispensary within twenty miles.

A convict regarded as an enlightened man!

Educational work

A certain number of non-Christian boys are beginning to enter the higher standards at the Thompson Memorial School at Kherwara, a middle school with an attached hostel. These are mostly drafted on from the elementary mission schools. Requests were received from several villages for a school to be opened in their midst—a hopeful sign, for in the past the Bhīls have hardly been sensible of the value of education, and such schools are important evangelistic agencies.

Requests for schools

Pastoral work

The congregations in the Mission are reported to be "growing in grace, slowly and quietly, but surely." There were but few cases requiring the exercise of discipline, although the fear of evil spirits which prevails among the Bhīls, and the superstitions connected with that fear, cause the Christians to be exposed to a good deal of temptation at the hands of their heathen relatives in times of sickness. A summer school for Bhīl teachers and preachers was held at Biladia in October, 1914, and a few months earlier three days were devoted to special meetings for women, at which about sixty joined in earnest Bible study.

BENGAL AND BIHAR MISSION

PAST HISTORY

Before India was opened to missionaries, a corresponding committee of the C.M.S. was formed at Calcutta, of which several government chaplains and influential laymen were members. Two English missionaries were sent to Calcutta in 1816; Burdwan was occupied in 1819; Krishnagar (Nadiya) in 1831; Bhagalpur in 1850; and Deoghar in 1912. Work among the Santals, an aboriginal tribe in Bengal, was begun at Hiranpur in 1860; Taljhari was occupied in 1862; Godda in 1872; and Bhagaya and Barharwa in 1878.

The see of Calcutta was formed in 1814, Dr. Middleton being the first occupant. Dr. Lefroy is the present bishop and Metropolitan of India.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The Mission is divided into four sections, two in Bengal and two in Bihar:—

I. In Calcutta and its suburbs there are a number of educational institutions, including a divinity school, a college (St. Paul's), two high schools for boys (St. Paul's and Garden Reach), and a boarding school for Christian girls. Hostels are maintained in connexion with some of these. Evangelistic work is carried on in several languages both in the city and district, and there are some half-dozen pastorates under a church council. There is also a mission station at Burdwan, a town seventy miles from Calcutta in and around which evangelistic work is maintained.

II. In the Nadiya district, with its large village population, Krishnagar, Chupra, Doyabari (Ranaghat), Bollobhpur, and Santirajpur are occupied by British missionaries. The last named is a centre from which itinerating work is maintained. Nine parishes are connected with the Nadiya Church Council.

A teachers' training school and boys' high school are found at Krishnagar, and a Christian boys' boarding school and an industrial school at Chupra, besides a number of vernacular schools at various places, while at Bollobhpur there is an orphanage for Christian girls. There are also a couple of hostels. A medical mission is carried on at Doyabari, with separate hospitals for men and women.

III. At Bhagalpur the institutions include a high school and Christian hostel for boys, a middle vernacular school for boys, a boys' orphanage, a dispensary, and a leper asylum; while at Jamalpur there is the Fraser Hostel for Indian Christian apprentices. There is a girls' boarding school with a normal class at Deoghar. A band of evangelists itinerates in the extensive district.

IV. Work is carried on also among the Santals, an aboriginal tribe, in Santalia, which lies in the Rajmahal hills in Bihar, south of the Ganges, and also in a colony in British Bhutan (see Map 8) north of the river. The pastoral care of the Christians is entrusted almost entirely to clergy of their own race. The Society has a divinity school at Taljhari, boarding schools for boys at Taljhari and Godda, and one for girls at Barharwa. It is also responsible for the management of a training class for men at Taljhari, which is financed by the Government. At Godda there are hostels for Santals and for Paharis.

The women's evangelistic work, save in Santalia, is mainly in the hands of missionaries of the C.E.Z.M.S., which has stations at Calcutta, Burdwan, Baranagore, Barrackpur, Jamalpur, Krishnagar, etc.

There are 25 European clergymen engaged in the Mission, 4 laymen, 20 wives of missionaries, and 9 single women; 2 of the above are doctors, and 1 is a nurse. The Indian workers consist of 28 clergymen and 376 Christian lay agents.

The following are the members of the Calcutta Corresponding Committee for 1915: The Bishop of Calcutta, Hon. Justice Caspersz, Hon. Justice E. P. Chapman, Dr. P. D. Bose, Mr. J. C. Dutt, Mr. W. R. C. Gourlay, Mr. F. G. Hawkins, Lt.-Col. L. R. Kenyon, Hon. Mr. R. G. Monteath, Mr. W. E. Pincombe, Hon. Justice H. Walmsley, Mr. W. A. A. Wood, and the Revs. Canon F. T. Cole, W. E. S. Holland, R. F. Pearce, and E. T. Sandys (secretary).

Death of Rev. C. S. Harington

THE Rev. C. S. Harington, who from 1879–89 was incumbent of the Old Church, Calcutta, died at Weston, Bath, on 14 October, 1914.

The Committee have accepted the resignations of the Rev. A. P. Turnbull and of Miss J. B. Monro; the latter, though she only joined the staff of the C.M.S. as an honorary missionary in local connexion in 1912, had worked at Doyabari from the establishment of the station by her father, Mr. J. Monro, in 1891 until 1905. Miss C. Dunbar, who also had been working at Doyabari, retired at the same time as Miss Monro.

Literary work

Canon F. T. Cole continued the revision of the New Testament in Santali, and, with the help of the Rev. H. R. Holmes, revised the Prayer Book in that language. In Bengali the Rev. P. Biswas wrote a book entitled "Salvation through the Cross," revised the translation of "Thoughts on Holiness," and began to prepare an enlarged edition of "Helps to the Study of the Bible," by the late Canon Ball; while the Rev. E. T. Noakes compiled a small book of daily services for use in a school. The Rev. A. B. Johnston wrote in English some tracts intended for students.

I. CALCUTTA AND BURDWAN

Educational work

Divinity School

THREE of the students at the Divinity School at Cossipore left to take up work as evangelists, and three other men were admitted in their place. The students engaged regularly in street preaching, and in the cold weather they spent a couple of months in camp at Chuadanga, in the Nadiya district.

St. Paul's College

St. Paul's College has undergone some changes since it was opened in 1865, with the aid of funds provided by Bishop Daniel Wilson, as a Cathedral Mission College. After fifteen years it was transformed into an institution for training Indian clergy, and it continued to be devoted solely to that purpose until 1899, when its university work was resumed. The next step was the removal of the divinity school to Cossipore, and the provision of new buildings and hostels for the college in Amherst Street. One of the hostels, named after the late Rev. Jani Ali, was opened in 1914 by Lord Carmichael, the Governor of Bengal.[1] The hostels now furnish accommodation for 122 students, but many applications for admission have to be refused. The college was affiliated to the B.A. standard at Calcutta University during the year under review. A daily Bible class is held in college, and in addition some of the men read the Bible in private with the help of the college staff. One of the men asked for baptism, and the day for it was fixed, but such pressure was brought to bear on him from home that he drew back. There were others who showed an appreciation of the teachings of Christianity, but were unwilling to confess Christ openly in baptism.[1] St. Paul's School at Calcutta, as the high school for Christian Bengali boys is now called, received that name in 1914 after a preaching brotherhood which for some years has existed among the pupils. The school, which stands in the front rank in India for the proportion of its alumni who have devoted themselves to mission work, has owed much of late years to the Rev. A. F. Ealand, who, in spite of ill-health, returned to his post at the end of 1913, only, alas! to be invalided home after a few months. A short service worker, Mr. B. W. Bean, although his term of service had expired, has postponed his return to England to read for holy orders so as to fill Mr. Ealand's place for a time. Six of the seven boys who sat for the matriculation examination passed, one taking first class honours. The one boy who failed was the first candidate from the school to do so in six years. The boys also acquitted themselves well at cricket and in other branches of athletics. Several boys desirous of becoming Christians entered the school, and one of them, a Hindu youth of 18, received baptism. Two others are the brothers of a recent convert, and there was a good deal of difficulty in getting them away from home, and doubt as to whether they would be allowed to remain at the school. The members of St. Paul's Brotherhood, some of them old boys of the school, encamped at Bongong, in the Nadiya district, during the Christmas vacation, 1913, preaching in the villages and bazaars during the day, and lecturing with the aid of the lantern at night; and at Easter, again, several days were given up to similar work at Krishtapur, near Calcutta.[2] The number of boys in the Garden Reach High School at Calcutta was affected by the Port Commissioners sending people away from the neighbourhood in order to extend the docks, but it still had between 400 and 500 pupils. Seven boys passed the matriculation examination. Two former pupils, who have lately been awarded the title of Rai Bahadur by the Government, have presented silver medals for competition in the school, and a third annually gives a special prize for Bible knowledge. Better still, some old boys appear almost ready to avow themselves disciples of Christ. Some uncertainty prevails as to the future of the school, for the site has been acquired by the port authority, and a difficulty is being experienced in finding a new one. Christ Church Girls' Boarding School, which was founded in 1883, is a high school for Christians, and has seventy boarders and twenty-five day scholars. A few non-Christian children are admitted both as boarders and day scholars; one of these was baptized during the year, and at least one other wished to confess Christ. There are four cubicles in the school hostel for students not belonging to the school, generally girls reading for their degree at the Bethune Women's College. A small boarding school for girls has been opened at Krishtapur, with ten pupils.

Pastoral work

The Calcutta District Church Council, under which three Indian pastors are engaged, and of which in 1914 a European, the Rev. E. Cannon, was chairman and treasurer, has the pastoral work at Burdwan also connected with it. The Christians are more liberal than they were, though they are still far from self-support, but many of them are slack in their observance of Sunday, and but few display much activity in witnessing for Christ. Among the few are the eleven members of the Trinity Church branch of the C.E.M.S. who teach in Sunday schools and engage in open-air preaching.

Evangelistic work

Nine catechists and three Bible women are employed in Calcutta and its suburbs. In the latter half of the year, at all events, they enjoyed great facilities for preaching the Gospel. The Rev. E. T. Butler, who rejoined the Mission in 1914, after an absence of five years, wrote in December :—

Great facilities for preaching the Gospel

> Six years ago, owing to the seditious spirit rampant in Calcutta, we were forbidden to preach in the squares, but now all prohibitions have been removed. The tremendous bond of sympathy created through the war has given the evangelistic missionary a unique opportunity. I doubt if the Christian message was ever listened to with such attention as at the present time. A visit to any of the squares on Sunday evenings is sufficient to prove this. In College Square not less than 600 students and others gather round to listen to us as we preach.

More than 7000 Scripture portions or other Christian books were sold in Calcutta—a larger number than for many years past, if not than ever before, and 1200 were disposed of in the district around Katwa, a sacred town thirty-three miles north-east of Burdwan, which was occupied by the Rev. W. V. R. Kamcké early in the year; but it is said that there is little real inquiry at either place. Some baptisms, however, are reported, In Calcutta several educated men were received into the visible Church; three of the inmates of a leper asylum at Gobra were baptized in August and nineteen in December; a couple of elderly women confessed Christ in baptism at Howrah; and a young Brahman was baptized at Burdwan, where the Maharajah and his father show their friendliness to the work in many ways.

II. NADIYA DISTRICT

Pastoral work

CHRISTIANS are found in about forty villages in the Nadiya district, and they are ministered to by nine Indian pastors connected with a church council which has a European chairman. Many of the converts support themselves by weaving, and in 1914 they were involved in some difficulties through a rise in the price of cotton, while of late years the demand for Manchester goods has increased considerably. In such emergencies capital is advanced to them by the co-operative credit banks, which exist in many villages under the charge of the superintendent of the Society's industrial work. A large order received in the autumn for dusters afforded a prospect of better days.

In several respects and at several places an improvement was witnessed in the Christians, and at Kumat Khali, in the Santirajpur district, the catechist's sister, who had been badly beaten by a Hindu gentleman under the false impression that she was kidnapping his son, interceded for her assailant at the trial, and led the Hindu magistrate to remark in open court, "Only Christians are capable of such an act." At Paksey, where the Lower Ganges Bridge, one of the first six bridges in the world for length and difficulty of construction, has been built, and where by arrangement with the Australian Baptists the C.M.S. missionaries look after the Indian Christians, the English engineers have been most helpful, maintaining a catechist, and building a house for him and also a small church, but the Indian converts show little religious zeal. Elsewhere they are lacking in independence, and many irregularities and much slackness exist among them. To the troubles arising from the unsatisfactory condition of the converts are added others due to Roman Catholic aggression.[1] One of their methods is to seek to win the Protestants to their Church by affording them financial help, and when the co-operative credit bank at Ratnapur was unable to advance the converts as much money as they required, the priest offered to supply their need if they would join his community.

The Nadiya district was the scene during the year of a new effort of some importance. In the past there has seemed to be little opening in mission circles for educated women, and in order to enable Christian girls educated in mission schools to see for themselves the need for evangelistic work in the villages, and to taste the joy of voluntary service in behalf of their sisters, a "settlement" was established by Miss M. K. Wolley at Krishnagar, in March. Two pupils of the Christ Church School, Calcutta, who had just taken their matriculation examination, then joined her, and in the space of four months and a half she received thirty-five visitors for longer or shorter periods. Few of them, however, were girls of leisure, living in their own homes and under no necessity to earn their living, and efforts to attract such met with but little success. Some of the visitors, who were mostly teachers or scholars from mission schools, gave addresses in the hospital or dispensary; others helped by singing hymns; others talked individually with the patients; and the trained educationists among them were a real inspiration to the teachers in the little day school. Miss Wolley herself also visited the women in Ranaghat and the surrounding villages, and found that through the work at the hospitals houses were open to her on all sides, while almost everywhere she was asked soon to repeat her visit. Evangelistic work was carried on by some of the pastors also, and, as already mentioned, the divinity students spent a couple of months in camp at Chuadanga, where they sold an unusually large amount of Christian literature. A mission servant at Doyabari was baptized with his wife and child,[1] a Mohammedan family were baptized at Kapasdanga, a young Moslem woman at Meherpur, and three adults at Chupra. Two Brahman widows at Santirajpur are reported as earnest inquirers, and a couple of Mohammedans and two others were admitted as catechumens at Tetulberia, where some twenty-six years ago a missionary was stoned out of the place, but where the people now show great anxiety to be taught. At Kushtia, where at one time a whole clan seemed to be on the point of deciding for Christ, some disappointment has been experienced.

The construction of a new dispensary was begun at Doyabari, and three waiting rooms, each of which can accommodate 250 people, were finished before the end of 1914. The number of out-patients increased by about fifty per cent. Two of the patients at the men's hospital, a Hindu and a Mohammedan, each of good position, were baptized, and also the wife of a servant at the women's hospital, while some of the inmates of the latter showed signs of faith in Christ.[2] Through the liberality of two friends a dispensary, with an Indian doctor in charge, is carried on at Santirajpur, at which about 21,000 visits are registered annually, and another has been opened at Chupra.

Educational work

The Vernacular Training School, which was founded at Santipur in 1849, was transferred to Krishnagar in 1864, and the jubilee of the latter event has been celebrated by opening three new lecture rooms. The school had twenty-five students in 1914, seven of them sent by the Baptist Missionary Society, and two by the London Missionary Society. Good results were attained in the government examinations. It has now been arranged that the men, before passing out to take up school work, shall have a special course of teaching at the divinity school. The "house system" has been introduced into St. John's School at Krishnagar, a high school with about 400 boys, and answers well. The members of the school social service league, of which the head master is the leader, dealt with several cases of cholera, and were often in request for nursing; they also started a night school for poor and low-caste boys. One old boy was baptized by a Baptist missionary, and another on his death bed showed faith in Christ. In answer to prayer the funds were obtained for a new dining hall for the Boys' Boarding School at Chupra, from which many lads go on to the training school at Krishnagar. Of the eighty boarders twelve are Mohammedans, and one of these asked for baptism and was put under instruction. Many of the lads voluntarily help in evangelistic work. The work of the school gained favourable reports from the director of public institutions, who advised that Government should be asked to open in connexion with it a "guru training school," i.e. a training school for village teachers, or "gurus." Besides the middle school there is also an Industrial School at Chupra, with thirty-two apprentices, all of them Christians. Two branches of industry, carpentry and blacksmithing, are taught, and the course lasts for from three to five years. The boys on leaving have little difficulty in finding employment, either in Calcutta, or in railway workshops, or in their own villages. There was quite a boom in trade in 1914, and the school has a "financial efficiency" of seventy-five per cent, that is to say, the receipts are three-quarters of the expenditure. In most industrial institutions in Bengal the efficiency is about thirty per cent or less, but it should be added that they generally give some class instruction in drawing, etc., which adds to their expenses.

III. BHAGALPUR

THE High School at Bhagalpur, a town 265 miles north-west of Calcutta, containing some 75,000 inhabitants, is under an Indian clergyman, the Rev. S. K. Tarafdar. It has on its roll the names of 350 boys, about two-thirds of whom are Hindus, while seventy are Mohammedans. Fourteen of the sixteen boys who sat for the matriculation examination passed, six in the first division, and the remainder in the second; one of them secured a government scholarship. Commercial classes are attached to the school and turn out a considerable number of skilled typists and stenographers. Three of the boys were under instruction for baptism.[1] The Middle School at Bhagalpur has rather more than one hundred pupils, and about half that number of lads are on the Orphanage roll. During the last thirteen years the orphanage has given on an average one new worker to the Mission each year. Most of the seventy-three pupils at the Girls' Boarding School at Deoghar are Christians, and of the others one was baptized in hospital, passing away shortly afterwards. Four students were in the Normal Class connected with the school, the only one in the Bhagalpur and Santali pargannas. At the end of 1913 three students from the class sat for the junior vernacular teachers' examination, and won the first, second, and eighth places among the twenty-eight successful candidates from the whole of Bihar.

Visits to Bengali gentlemen

Evangelistic work was maintained both at Bhagalpur and at Deoghar, a town sacred to Shiva, where work formerly carried on by an American mission called the "Christian Mission" was taken over by the C.M.S. in 1912.[1] Visits were paid to many of the Bengali gentlemen who frequent the latter town as a health resort, and the Gospel was preached among the constant streams of pilgrims, and the crowds of priests performing their duties among them. Itinerations were also made in the district, and a visit was paid to the Baunsi mela, at which a good deal of Christian literature was sold. Nearly 32,000 visits of out-patients were recorded at the dispensary at Bhagalpur.

IV. SANTALIA

A GOOD deal of success has been granted to the efforts to win the Santals, an aboriginal tribe,[2] for Christ, and there are now 6700 converts connected with the C.M.S. Mission. All the Christians, with the exception of those in the Godda district, are connected with a district church council under a European chairman, the Rev. H. R. Holmes. He speaks of them as supporting the church funds generously, besides contributing £50 to a mission fund which maintains seven evangelists. In the Santal colony a band of honorary workers has done much to win the heathen residents in the colony, as well as to preach the Gospel in the regions beyond. At one place the Christians, it is said, are kept well up to the mark by an old woman, the headman's mother. As a heathen she was diligent in her care of the local place of spirit and ancestor worship, and scrupulous in her religious observances; and since she has become a Christian she is constantly stirring up the converts to do their duty.

More than one hundred persons were baptized in the church council sphere in 1914, and several inquirers are reported in the Bhagaya district. It is more difficult for men and women to confess Christ openly in that region than in the eastern portion of the Mission, because the Christians are few and far between, and persecution is more acute. One or two men in this way were prevented from coming forward for baptism. Several itinerations were made by Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Jessop, and at one camp they were encouraged by the friendliness of the headman, who, although a heathen, invited them to his house and asked them to preach the Gospel before all his people.[1] Lantern services were held at every camp, with audiences varying in number from 100 to 400 or even 500. There is still much land remaining to be possessed in Santalia, and the need of more workers is pressing. The ignorance of the heathen Santals is great, and makes work among them difficult; and, moreover, there is a danger lest they, like other animistic tribes, should be absorbed by Hinduism. The Rev. T. Lenman wrote in November :—

Danger lest the Santals should be absorbed by Hinduism

It is now or never if we are to reach the Santals. Every year I see them becoming more and more irrevocably Hinduized in their habits and outlook, not because of any sympathy or liking that the Santal has for the Hindu or his ways, but by reason of the subtle, permeating influence of Hinduism as a social system, which seems to infect gradually all the less cultured and intellectual races who do not protect themselves by erecting racial barriers against it. The Santal race is becoming gradually disintegrated, and under the influence of Western civilization and education their racial customs and national clannishness are breaking down slowly but surely. Unless Christianity can enter to fill the void and unite them once more in the form of a Christian Church, the race will be absorbed into the far larger Hindu community. They will be much harder to win then. A forward movement now might result—I believe it would result—in a mass movement of the whole race, but with the present staff a forward movement is impossible.

Educational work

Divinity School

The preparation of Santals for work in the Mission is carried on by Canon F. T. Cole at the Divinity School at Taljhari, where two men were reading in 1914 for deacons' orders. Something in this way is done also by Mr. Jessop, who takes a band of probationary workers with him on his itinerations, giving them some lectures, but mostly training them in practical work. Three of the pupils in the Boys' Boarding School at Taljhari were baptized, and there was good news of some old boys. One was baptized with his family, and another, himself baptized while in the school, has been the means of leading to Christ his father, mother, brothers, and sisters-in-law. The boarding school at Pathra, three miles from Godda, is primarily for Paharis, an aboriginal race distinct from the Santals, but while there are about thirty of them in the school, there are double that number of Santal boarders, who have their own hostel. The class for baptism had eleven members. The only secondary girls' school in the Mission is the Boarding School at Barharwa. One of the children was baptized in 1914, and two others asked for baptism, but most of the girls are Christians. They contrive, in spite of their poverty, to raise £2 year by year for the support of a Bible woman. Unfortunately it is necessary to refuse many applications for admission, since the school is overcrowded.

SOUTH INDIA MISSION

PAST HISTORY

The Tamil country south of Madras was the scene of the S.P.C.K.'s Missions in the eighteenth century. But the first two clergymen of the Church of England who went to India as missionaries were sent to Madras by the Church Missionary Society in 1815, having been preceded in 1814 by two men in Lutheran orders. The East India Act of 1833 made provision for a new bishopric of Madras, and Daniel Corrie was consecrated in 1835. Dr. Whitehead (consecrated 1899) is the present bishop. Work was commenced at Ootacamund, on the Nilgiri Hills, in 1870.

The Telugu Mission was begun in 1841 by two of the most devoted men on the roll of C.M.S. missionaries, Robert T. Noble and Henry Watson Fox (an old Rugbeian). Noble started in 1843 the famous English school at Masulipatam now known by his name, worked it for twenty-two years, and died at his post in 1865. Many Brahmans trained in it have embraced the Gospel, and it has sent forth several Indian clergymen to labour among their countrymen. Fox was a preaching missionary, and set the example of those itinerating and rural missionary efforts which have resulted in the foundation of an increasing Indian Church, hitherto chiefly drawn from the Malas and other outcaste or low-caste people. Ellore was occupied in 1854; Bezwada, 1858; Raghavapuram, 1872; Khammamett, 1888; and Haidarabad, 1901. A Mission among the Kois, a non-Aryan tribe on the Upper Godavari, was founded at Dummagudem by General Haig in 1860. An Indian, the Rev. V. S. Azariah, was consecrated as Bishop of Dornakal (a part of the Telugu Country) in 1912.

In 1820 the Rev. J. Hough, chaplain at Palamcotta, drew the attention of the Society to the claims of Tinnevelly, where there was already a community of 3000 professed Indian Christians, an offshoot from the S.P.C.K.'s Lutheran Mission in Tanjore. Two missionaries were at once set apart for this work, and from that time to this, through the labours of Rhenius, Pettitt, Thomas, J. T. Tucker, Hobbs, Sargent, and others (not to mention workers of the S.P.G., which has a fruitful Mission contiguous to that of the C.M.S.), the Gospel has continued to spread among the Tamil population, chiefly among the Shanars, or cultivators of the palmyra tree. In North Tinnevelly a vigorous itinerant mission was established by Ragland, D. Fenn, and Meadows. Assistant bishops to the Bishop of Madras for the Indian congregations in Madura and Tinnevelly were consecrated in 1877; and in 1896 the bishopric in Tinnevelly and Madura was founded.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The South India Mission, in which 24 European and Colonial clergymen, 94 Indian clergymen, 1 layman, 16 wives of missionaries, 14 single women, and 1732 Indian Christian lay agents are engaged, falls into three divisions.

I. The first division comprises the work in Madras, the Nilgiris, and the Wynaad (see Map 14), though these are widely separated, Ootacamund being 300 miles south-west of Madras.

Pastoral and evangelistic work among Hindus in Madras is exclusively in the hands of a district church council, which is manned and, as regards pastoral work, entirely financed by Indians; but the Society has a divinity school and the Harris High School, and is responsible for special efforts to influence Mohammedans. In the Nilgiris and the Wynaad there are several schools for boys, and a number of hill tribes are reached by the evangelistic work.

II. The Telugu Country (see Map 13) stretches 500 miles northward from the city of Madras along the eastern coast of India, in some parts extending inland for 300 miles. About half-way up, near the coast, lies Masulipatam, the oldest station of the Telugu Mission; the other chief stations are Bezwada, on the Kistna, some fifty miles from its mouth; Ellore, north of Masulipatam; Dummagudem, 100 miles up the Godavari; and Khammamett and Haidarabad (see Map 10), both in the Nizam's dominions, the latter being the capital.

The chief educational agencies are a training institution, the Noble College with an attached high school, and the Sharkey Memorial Girls' School, at Masulipatam; and high schools for boys at Bezwada and Ellore. There are 42 Indian clergymen engaged in ministering to the numerous but scattered bodies of converts, who number 35,000 in all.

At Haidarabad the work is chiefly among Mohammedans; and at Dummagudem a few Kois are reached.

III. In Tinnevelly, at the extreme south of the Indian Peninsula (see Map 14), a district church council with an English chairman, under which 45 Indian clergymen are labouring, is responsible for the pastoral work among the 70,000 Christians, and also, with the help of an itinerating band of evangelists, for most of the evangelistic work, the majority of the Society's missionaries being engaged in education.

There are a preparandi class at Palamcotta, a college and high school in Tinnevelly Town, high schools for boys at Palamcotta, Srivilliputhur, and Mengnanapuram, and boys' boarding schools at Surandei, Sachiapuram, and Dohnavur; while female education is provided for by the Sarah Tucker College and a boarding school at Palamcotta, the Elliot Tuxford School at Mengnanapuram, and boarding schools at Nallur, Sachiapuram, and Suviseshapuram. There are schools for blind boys and girls at Palamcotta.

The C.E.Z.M.S. carries on women's work at Madras and Ootacamund; at Masulipatam, Ellore, Bezwada, Khammamett, and Dummagudem, in the Telugu Country; and at Palamcotta (with schools for deaf and dumb boys and girls) and other places in Tinnevelly.

The following are the members of the Madras Corresponding Committee for 1915: The Bishop of Madras, the Archdeacon of Madras, Major F. F. Elwes, I.M.S., Mr. E. S. Hensman, Mr. S. D. Pears, and the Revs. C. H. Browne, W. E. Wood, and E. Langdale-Smith (acting secretary).

Centenary of the South India Mission

THE Centenary of the C.M.S. in South India was celebrated in Madras during the first week in January, 1914. Besides a number of other services and meetings in the various churches and halls, a large public meeting was held in the Victoria Town Hall, at which the Bishop of Madras pointed out how much has been done by the C.M.S. for the outcastes, and referred also to the way in which the Society has constantly striven for peace and unity.

Deaths of Bishop Williams,

The death of Dr. Williams, Bishop in Tinnevelly and Madura, occurred suddenly from heart failure at Coonoor railway station on 30 June, 1914. He first went to Madras as a government chaplain in 1880, and had a varied experience of work in many different stations, civil and military. During the latter part of his service he was chaplain of St. George's Cathedral, Madras, and Archdeacon of the Diocese. In 1905 he was consecrated in Madras Cathedral by the Metropolitan and other bishops.[1]

Rev. R. C. Macdonald,

The Rev. R. C. Macdonald passed away at Brighton on 24 February, 1915. He was a great-grandson of Flora Macdonald of Skye, who helped Charles Edward the Pretender after the battle of Culloden in April, 1746. He sailed for India in 1859, and was for a time joint secretary with David Fenn of the South India Mission. He retired in 1876.

Rev. P. Gnanayutham, and Rev. J. Josiah

The deaths have also occurred on 16 and 18 March, 1915, respectively of the Rev. Perinbam Gnanayutham, pastor of Anandhapuram, who was ordained in 1907, and the Rev. Joseph Josiah, pastor of Santhapuram, who was ordained in 1914.

The Revs. G. H. Cranswick, of the New South Wales Association, G. Manikam, and S. Masillamani have retired, the first named on account of Mrs. Cranswick's ill-health.

Literary work

The Rev. J. Cain wrote a commentary on the Epistle to the Galatians, various articles for a Dictionary of the Bible projected by the Christian Literature Society for India, and "A Simple Exposition of the Lord's Prayer." The Rev. J. B. Panes prepared a new commentary on the text of the Prayer Book. All this work was in Telugu.

I. MADRAS, THE NILGIRIS, AND THE WYNAAD

Madras

District Church Council

WITH the exception of the Mohammedan Mission, all the pastoral and evangelistic work in Madras connected with the C.M.S. is entirely in the hands of a district church council, of which the members are Indians, and an Indian clergyman, the Rev. W. D. Clarke, is chairman. There are two pastorates in the city and two in the district, and the income from the pastorates in 1913 amounted to Rs 8714, while the expenditure was Rs 6626. Even the rural pastorates raise almost enough for the support of their pastors and catechists. Mr. Clarke says that the European war has brought a new spirit into the country, of which he made use for the development of missionary work. At a special meeting of the committee of the southern pastorate the names of nearly fifty well-educated members of Zion Church were written down; these people were divided into six groups, and to each group some form of active missionary work was assigned. For the first time in the history of the Church a band of women was formed to visit poor Christian women, the maternity hospital, etc. The Preachers' Association, besides continuing its work in the villages, began to devote three hours on one day in each month to intercession for the peoples of India. Ten adults, one of them a Brahman and another a Panchamma student, were baptized in the pastorate.

Development of a missionary spirit

Work among Moslems

Street preaching in Hindustani was carried on at six places in Madras under Canon M. G. Goldsmith. Some gospel portions were sold, and handbills were always in demand. Canon Goldsmith visited Bangalore, where the Rev. L. S. D. Singh works among Moslems, and delivered a lecture on "the Mohammedan Position"; he also made an extended tour in Travancore with a view to reaching the Moslems. A visit to Bangalore and a number of other centres on both the east and west coasts was paid in 1913 by the Rev J. J. Johnson, who lectured to good gatherings of pundits and other educated Indians on the Bhagavad-Gita, comparing its teaching with that of Christianity.[1] One man was baptized in Madras by Canon Goldsmith, and a few inquirers came forward.

Divinity School

The Divinity School in Madras had five students, two in their third year and the remainder in their first. A new curriculum, an adaptation to the special needs of Indian candidates of that prescribed for the Oxford and Cambridge preliminary examination for holy orders, was adopted for the new students. In the autumn of 1914 the men were transferred to the Cambridge Nicholson Institution at Kottayam, the services of the Rev. E. A. L. Moore, the principal of the divinity school, being required in Tinnevelly. The Harris High School has about 350 pupils.

The Nilgiris and the Wynaad

Little information is forthcoming concerning the work on the Nilgiris and in the Wynaad beyond the statement that it made steady progress. Notwithstanding a certain amount of distress, the congregations of the pastorates contributed liberally to the various war funds and also to the funds of the Church, and for the first time the Ootacamund congregation was able to provide the salary of its pastors and to meet all church expenses. Towards the end of the year there was some distress among the Christians, caused partly by loss of employment owing to the war, and the Rev. H. A. D. Moorhouse, writing in December, sums up the position by saying that "the outlook in spiritual matters is hopeful; in matters financial it is gloomy."

Hopeful spiritual outlook

II. TELUGU COUNTRY

Evangelistic work

For several years past the community movements towards Christianity in the Telugu Country have been conspicuous in the annual letters of the C.M.S. missionaries, but it is noticeable that those which describe the work carried on in 1914 contain hardly any reference to large ingatherings or to requests for instruction. Rev. E. S. Tanner mentions the baptism of 399 persons in the Ellore district, and the enrolment of between 300 and 400 inquirers; and the Rev. J. Cain, of Dummagudem, speaks of accessions in the Rampa district, which is under an Indian clergyman, and of a stirring of the "dry bones" in another part, and adds that a couple of new outstations were opened, while the people of several other villages were anxious for instruction, but were prevented from asking for a teacher by fear of their landlord magistrate, who disapproves of education. But this is practically all. At Masulipatam the bazaar work was hindered by the reproach often made that the Christian nations of Europe were at war, and a "spirit of indifferentism" prevailed among the Hindus in general. Evangelistic work is carried on systematically and earnestly at Haidarabad, in the Nizam's dominions, but "the time of harvest has not yet come."

Training Institution

Six of the divinity students at the Training Institution at Masulipatam were ordained in February, 1914, and the class was then suspended owing to the departure on furlough of the Rev. J. B. Panes, the principal, who is assisted by the Rev. Ganugapati Kantayya, an Indian clergyman. In the same compound with the divinity class is a central boarding school, which in 1914 had nearly forty normal students, besides eight men who had finished their course but remained for further special Bible teaching, and also some other boarders, evangelists, college students, etc. The normal students mentioned, together with some others who are not boarders, attend the normal school at Buttayapett, a municipal division of Masulipatam. Many of the non-Christians among the men expressed their conviction that our Lord was "a great personage, almost divine," but caste prejudice and the fear of man prevented them from acting in accordance with their convictions. There are 350 students in the Noble College, also at Masulipatam, and 1150 boys in the high school and its branches. An increasing interest was shown by the college students in the study of the Gospel, and a spirit of inquiry, which had been dormant for some time, again appeared. One man asked for baptism, but domestic difficulties caused delay. The college Christian union supplies teachers for a Sunday school composed of the boys, which has 190 names on its roll. The High School at Ellore celebrated its diamond jubilee in March, 1914, by a meeting at which the chair was taken by Bishop Azariah. Among the old boys of the school is a local rajah who has translated the Gospels of St. Matthew, St. Luke, and St. John into rhythmical Telugu and has written a preface of which one who was born and bred a Christian might well have been the author.[1] The high school classes at the Sharkey Memorial Girls' School have been given up in order that more attention may be paid to training teachers, and higher elementary and lower elementary normal classes have been opened, with six and seven members respectively.

Pastoral work

The Bishop of Dornakal held two ordinations, one at Ellore in the spring, and the other at Khammamett in September, and immediately after each he conducted a summer school for mission agents. That at Ellore was attended by about twenty clergymen, a dozen catechists, one hundred teachers and evangelists, sixty wives of workers, seventy of the elder children from the boarding schools, and seventy others. Eight different meetings were held on each of the eight days that the school lasted. Great good was done and happily it endured, for writing seven months afterwards Mr. Tanner enumerated the following as among the results: More thorough daily Bible study; better preparation of candidates for baptism and confirmation; increased support of church funds; a deeper sense of sin and a higher spiritual tone; and more organized temperance work. Bishop Azariah laid great stress on the temperance question, having come to the conclusion that almost ninety per cent of the Christians in the Telugu Country, and about half the workers, took toddy or other intoxicants. A Telugu Church Temperance Society has now been formed, and at the Khammamett summer school all but twenty of the 140 workers stood up before their fellows to join. Among the signs of progress in the Masulipatam district may be mentioned the liberality of the mission agents, who, in order to meet possible retrenchment in the Society's grants owing to the war, voluntarily doubled their personal gifts, while the pastorate committees undertook their own repairs and defrayed other minor expenses instead of relying upon outside help. The war affected the lace industry, which supports a large number of Christians in the Dummagudem district, and for some weeks 400 of them had to go to their homes without work. In order to counteract the wild rumours extant in the remoter villages concerning the war, Mr. Cain arranged that a Telugu Christian newspaper, "The Ravi," should be sent to each teacher, so as to enable him to circulate accurate news; he also wrote a small pamphlet explaining the causes of the war. A hostel for Malabar Christian students has been opened at Haidarabad, where marked advance has taken place among the Christians.

III. TINNEVELLY

Pastoral work

In Tinnevelly, where the C.M.S. began work nearly one hundred years ago, there has arisen an indigenous Church, manned entirely by Indians; governed by a church council, consisting of Indians, but with a chairman appointed by the C.M.S.; and contributing Rs 113,000 towards its expenditure of Rs 136,000. The Christians, who number 70,000, are gathered in congregations; the congregations are organized in pastorates; while the pastorates are grouped together in circles. Representatives of the congregations sit on the pastorate committees, and these appoint some of their number to serve on the circle committees, from which delegates are sent to the district church council. The money needed for the work is raised by means of sangam money,[1] by offerings at the annual harvest thanksgiving services, and in other ways. One of the fourteen circles has already attained to self-support, and several others have it almost within sight. In 1914 the council organized special meetings for the deepening of spiritual life among the members of the congregations, the lay agents, and the pastors.

Organization of the Tinnevelly Church

[1] "Sangam" means "congregation," and the money is termed "sangam money" because it is paid in at a special gathering of the congregation. It forms a church sustentation fund.

Such gatherings had been held from time to time at several places, but arrangements have now been made for them to take place regularly and in all the circles.

"Gospel Day"

One happy characteristic of the Christians is the zeal with which they observe what is known as "Gospel Day." It dates from 1907, when a suggestion was made by one of their number that on a certain Sunday all of them should devote the whole day to preaching the Gospel to non-Christians. The idea found ready and wide acceptance. Year by year the annual letters from the Mission speak of the Christians going forth in bands to sing and preach the Gospel to their non-Christian fellow countrymen, and in 1914 the example set by Tinnevelly was followed in Travancore also. Some of the Tinnevelly converts engage in evangelistic work at other times besides "Gospel Day," and hold meetings in the heathen villages when there is a full moon. In private, also, they bear their witness of what God has done for them. The Rev. T. S. Balusundaram says that some of his people "converse about Jesus Christ and His wonderful salvation with their Hindu friends whenever they get chances," and instances a sub-magistrate who "whenever he comes across his fellow Hindu officials avails himself of the opportunity of talking about Jesus and the salvation of mankind"; while another pastor, the Rev. A. Devadas, mentions that in a certain high school managed by Hindus, most of the teachers, including the head master and the first assistant, who are graduates, are Christians, and that their influence is very prominent in the school. Several congregations showed increased spirituality, and a member of the Manarkadu congregation is said often to be found alone by the river near his home, pleading earnestly with God to revive the Church. Such characteristics and incidents indeed afford ground for thanksgiving, the more so when the difficulties of many of the Christians are borne in mind—the persecution to which they are exposed, such as being stoned when they meet for worship, or falsely accused if they refuse to subscribe towards idol processions and the like, and their poverty, accentuated as it was in some cases in 1914 by lack of work owing to the war. But for an accurate presentation of the condition of the Tinnevelly Church, it is necessary to say something about the faults which exist. Jealousy is not unknown. The caste spirit survives. Remnants of superstition lead to the observance of heathen rites in some cases, especially in times of sickness. Drunkenness is a growing evil. Marriages with non-Christians are a fruitful source of excommunications, though at times they are due to the lack of Christian girls, which compels a man either to take a Hindu bride or to remain unmarried. And lastly, while the evangelistic spirit, as has been pointed out, is strikingly shown by many, there are some who are not very anxious to see new and poor congregations formed within their circles, because of the effect upon the council funds and its bearing on self-support; in other words, there is some danger lest self-support should become too much the ultimate end in view, and self-extension be subordinated to it.

In evangelistic work the council agents have the help of the Itinerating Band, under a European leader, Mr. E. Keyworth, which in 1914 preached in more than 300 towns, villages, and hamlets, and sold upwards of 5000 gospels, besides 20,000 copies of Christian story books, tracts, etc. Many new converts were gathered in—fifty at Achamputhur, near Sandhapuram; sixty at Threekudapuram in the same neighbourhood; and fifteen families of the depressed classes in the Tinnevelly pastorate, who had been carefully tested for a couple of years. In two instances the circumstances of the ingathering call for notice. In the Dohnavur pastorate a fund to be devoted to evangelistic work has been raised as a memorial to the late Rev. T. Walker [1]; this is steadily growing, and earnest work is carried on with its help. A month after a certain village had been visited by the evangelists, whose expenses are defrayed from the fund, the people met together and were discussing several matters, when a man broke in with a remark to the effect that only worldly matters were engaging their attention. "There is a thing of greater importance," he said, "which we must specially attend to; we must all become Christians." The assembly expressed their agreement; a number of families put themselves under instruction; and twenty-two of their members were baptized in 1914. In another pastorate the committee at the beginning of the year resolved to work and pray for the conversion of six families from Hinduism; before the end of it they had been rewarded by witnessing the ingathering of ten families. Besides these converts many inquirers are mentioned, some of them formerly pupils in mission schools.

Educational work

The primary schools in Tinnevelly are under the district church council, but the C.M.S. is responsible for all the higher education and for training Indian school teachers. The latter branch of work is carried on at the Preparandi Institution at Palamcotta, where are seventy-eight students in four different classes, while the attached model school has 225 pupils; the great majority of both students and pupils are boarders. The men are prepared for spiritual work as well as for secular duties, and every Sunday evening they go out in bands to preach in the villages; whatever kind of reception they meet with, they always return with the same shout of praise, "Victory, victory now to Jesus." Moreover, it is impressed upon them that their faith should affect their life, and the Rev. R. F. Ardill, who is in charge of the institution, gives some instances to show that their Christianity is really practical. On one occasion, when a Mohammedan student was spirited away just at the time fixed for his baptism, the men spared no effort to find him and bring him back, though it meant spending many hours, without food or rest, searching for him. Their devotion is shown, too, during cholera epidemics. Mr. Ardill writes :—

Nursing cholera patients

Our school is situated in the midst of paddy fields with the irrigation channel close by; and our end of the town is by far the dirtiest and least salubrious. As a consequence we are exposed to every epidemic that prevails, more especially of cholera. Scarcely a year passes that we do not have two or three serious cases, and every year since I arrived there have been one or two fatal cases. Those who have seen a patient suffering under this terrible sickness, looking strong and well in the morning, and laid in his coffin in the evening—who have watched him through the early stages of the sickness, every half-hour growing weaker and weaker, while all efforts to save him prove in vain, until the stage of collapse comes, and the eyes grow dim and sunken, the cheeks thin and hollow, and all hope of his pulling through vanishes—only such can understand what this terribly loathsome disease means, and what a strong nerve and a stronger faith are needed to sit with the patient and nurse him; to try and keep him clean from the effects of offensive vomiting and constant and loathsome purging, knowing that in doing so oneself is exposed to infection all the time. And yet a call for volunteers to help in such cases has never been in vain. Two or three fellow-students—not relatives, and as often as not of a different caste—will undertake to sit with the patient, even all night: to give the necessary medicines, keep him clean, rub him with turpentine, keep him packed between bags of hot sand to help the circulation maintain the heat of the body; and to lend him their own blankets or coats; and though they weep till their hearts almost break when all their efforts fail to preserve life, they will wash the corpse and dress it often in their own garments, and put it into the coffin, before they think they have fulfilled their duty. This I call practical Christianity; and the leader in all this is the house master, whose house is close to the sick room, and who takes neither food nor rest at such times until there is either strong hope of recovery or the case has proved fatal.

Tinnevelly College

Very nearly 1000 young men and boys are educated at the Tinnevelly College and high school, which in 1914 were more highly commended by the inspector than ever before. There are 135 students in the college classes, and the Hindus and Mohammedans among them, who number about ninety, listen with evident interest to the daily Bible instruction. Four other High Schools for boys, besides that connected with the Tinnevelly College, are found in the Mission. The great majority of the boys in the Palamcotta high school are Christians, and of the remainder four were baptized in 1914. The school took a high place in the government school leaving examination, and in physiology beat every other institution in the presidency. Two old boys have been sent to the front. One, a sergeant in the 83rd Walajabad Light Infantry, was baptized while in the school; he afterwards was noted for his keenness in serving Christ, and it is said that he has been the life and soul of Christian work among the soldiers in his regiment. The Mary Arden School, also at Palamcotta, in which there are very few Christian lads, continued to prove itself a strong evangelistic agency, two of the boys receiving baptism; and the high school at Srivilliputhur has a like happy reputation, and a number of the lads have lately declared their intention of seeking baptism as soon as the way shall open. Considerable difficulty was experienced with the staff at the Mengnanapuram school. Among the Middle Schools good progress was made at Surandei and Panneivilei; the government grant to those schools and the high school at Mengnanapuram has increased in six years from Rs 227 to Rs 2210. Some of the Surandei boys are keen Bible students, and anxious for the conversion of the heathen in the villages around.

Middle schools

Among the institutions for girls the chief place is taken by the Sarah Tucker College at Palamcotta, where are a training class with twenty students, college classes with twenty-one students, a high school, and other departments. The training course for those in the elementary grade has been extended to two years, which will enable more thorough preparation to be given, and also a definite course in teaching of Scripture. Four of the five students who entered for the training certificate examination succeeded in passing. Realizing that the war may affect the resources of the Society, the girls, by means of cultivating parts of the compound, denying themselves in the matter of food, and so on, and with the help of the branch and boarding schools, raised about Rs 300 to aid the finances. There are several Middle Schools for girls, the best known being the Elliot Tuxford School at Mengnanapuram, which has the names of 116 boarders and forty-seven day girls on its roll. Three of the children received baptism, and four are still unbaptized, though one, at least, of the latter is an earnest Christian and is seeking, with every prospect of success, to win her father. A disastrous flood occurred at Mengnanapuram in December, 1914, the water rising to within an inch of the main bungalow, which is nearly three feet above the level of the ground, and carrying away about half the other buildings. Fourteen of the inmates of the Schools for the Blind, which contain both boys and girls, were baptized in 1914, and seventeen young men and women who were still in the schools were confirmed. The industrial work is developing satisfactorily.[1]

TRAVANCORE AND COCHIN MISSION

PAST HISTORY

The Mission in the protected Hindu States of Travancore and Cochin, which occupy a narrow strip of country on the Malabar Coast in the extreme south-west of India, between the Ghats and the Indian Ocean, was established in 1816 at the invitation of Colonel Munro, the British Resident. The metran (or bishop) of the ancient Syrian Church of Malabar, which claims to have been founded by the Apostle St. Thomas, had in 1806 requested help from the English Church. For twenty years the Mission was worked by Benjamin Bailey, Joseph Fenn, Henry Baker, sen., and others; their object originally being to benefit the Syrian Church by encouraging and aiding it to reform itself. Since 1837, however, the missionaries have aimed directly at the evangelization of the heathen, thousands of whom have been baptized, while, as an indirect result of the work, a love of the Gospel has sprung up among the ancient Christians, whom the missionaries have urged to remain in and reform their own Church. Mar Athanasius, an old C.M.S. schoolboy, who was metran from 1843 to 1877, was an active reformer. Since his death a large section of the Syrians has become an autonomous episcopal Church (known as the Reformed Church of St. Thomas), which maintains reformed worship in the vernacular, holds annually a convention for the deepening of the spiritual life, and carries on evangelistic work; it has also sent missionaries to other parts of India to work in connexion with the Indian National Missionary Society, to the funds of which it contributes liberally. Allepie was occupied in 1816; Kottayam, 1817; Trichur, 1842; Pallam, 1845; Tiruwella, 1849; Kunnankulam, 1854; the Arrian Mission was begun in 1855; and the Alwaye Itinerancy in 1881.

The see of Travancore and Cochin was constituted in 1879. The present bishop is Dr. Charles Hope Gill.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

Of the stations at present occupied by the Society's missionaries, four, namely, Kottayam, Pallam, Tiruwella and Allepie, are in the State of Travancore, where also is the Alwaye Itinerancy; while two, Trichur and Kunnankulam, are in the Cochin State (see Map 14).

The staff of the Mission consists, besides Bishop Gill, of 8 European clergymen, 5 missionaries' wives, and 8 single women. The Indian clergymen number 34, and the Indian Christian lay agents 687.

Some of the missionaries are in charge of districts and are carrying on evangelistic work at Trichur, Kunnankulam, Alwaye, Allepie, and Tiruwella. Others are engaged in educational work at the Cambridge Nicholson Institution (a theological college and normal school), the College, and the Baker Memorial School for girls, all at Kottayam; and the Buchanan Institution (a normal school for women) at Pallam. The C.E.Z.M.S. has stations at Kottayam, Ernakulam, Trevandrum, and Trichur.

The majority of the 56,000 converts in the Mission are linked with one or other of the 29 pastorates connected with 4 church councils, and the care of them appertains to Indian clergymen, with whom some of the European missionaries occasionally join in evangelistic work.

The finances of the Mission are administered by the Madras secretary.

Death of Rev. J. H. Wilkinson

THE Rev. J. H. Wilkinson, who was on the staff of the Travancore and Cochin Mission from 1858–66, passed away at Exeter on 10 September, 1914. The Rev. M. C. Puthenpurakel has retired.

Pastoral work

Almost all the pastoral work in the Mission, which will reach its centenary in 1916, is carried on by the native Church. The Christians are grouped in pastorates under four district councils (not one, as in Tinnevelly), which again are under a provincial council; and these bodies, though they receive a grant-in-aid from the C.M.S., are self-governing and their proceedings are not as a rule submitted to the Society for confirmation. Several of the pastors refer to the efforts of the members of their flocks to spread the knowledge of Christ. "Gospel Day," a custom borrowed from Tinnevelly,[1] was observed in many parts of Travancore in 1914 for the first time. Some of the younger Christians took other opportunities of engaging in evangelistic work, though the number of those who offer themselves for training as evangelists is unfortunately but small; and an example of zeal on the part of an old Pulayan convert is quoted. He cannot read, but taking a New Testament in his hands he visits the market places and houses and speaks of Christ and His salvation, and by his efforts some heathen families have been led to join the Church. Moreover one congregation, realizing its responsibility towards the outcastes, has opened a school for their benefit; while in another pastorate four Christian women devote one day a month to teaching their poorer sisters at out-stations where no systematic women's work is maintained. It is not the custom in Travancore to hold regular prayer meetings in church or any central place, but each congregation is divided into "prayer circles," consisting of about twelve families, and gatherings for intercession are held in the houses of the members in turn. The pastor or catechist-in-charge presides, lyrics are sung, a portion of Scripture is read and expounded, the president and a few others engage in prayer, and after (or before) the meeting refreshments are provided. The contributions of the people usually amount to more than Rs 30,000 per annum, and in 1914 the total was Rs 37,000. It would have been larger but for the dislocation of trade caused by the war. The Christians have been drawn from several social strata, but the great majority of them are of outcaste origin. Their virtues and faults are much the same as in other parts of India, and to the latter which generally prevail are added fickleness and instability. The activity of the Plymouth Brethren and of false teachers from America and from among the Indians themselves, which was briefly referred to in last year's Report,[2] was pronounced in 1914, and many of the illiterate Christians were led astray. The Rev. W. A. Stephens writes:—

Observance of "Gospel Day" begun in Travancore

"Prayer circles"

The whole depressed-class community is in a state of ferment, being stirred by a new self-consciousness; after centuries of silently borne oppression they are smarting under a sense of social injustice and are crying out for land and liberty. Even the Christians are easily susceptible to new movements under popular leaders who outline plausible schemes for rapid progress. Unfortunately at this crisis we have no educated men belonging to this community among our pastors. A widespread tendency is manifest to forget or belittle the progress which has been achieved under the banner of the Christian faith. Church subscriptions are paid unwillingly or not paid at all. A spirit of murmuring, restless independence is abroad, fed by ignorance and social discontent.

Evangelistic work

The bulk of the evangelistic as well as of the pastoral work is in the hands of the Indian pastors, with whom some lay workers are associated. In four districts, however (the Cochin State, the Alwaye Itinerancy, and the Tiruwella and Allepie districts), it is carried on under a European missionary, though the Indian pastors whose head-quarters are in or near these districts co-operate with the respective missionaries as far as their pastoral duties permit. As an example of the districts the Alwaye Itinerancy may be taken. It is some forty miles in length from north to south, and stretches eastward from within a few miles of the sea to the Ghats. There are seventeen out-stations, two new ones having been established in 1914, but the greater portion of the district is still unevangelized. Some of the congregations are large, as at Wellur, where it is 500 strong, and Wadekara, where thirty people, most of them adults, were added to the Church by baptism at the end of 1913. Much time naturally is absorbed in ministering to the converts, but evangelistic tours are also undertaken, in which a band of boy musicians renders valuable help. Preaching was carried on at several Hindu festivals in various parts of the Mission, and a real impression appeared to be made on the Mohammedans at Allepie by a visit from Canon M. G. Goldsmith of Madras. The chief interest, however, centres in the movement among the outcastes. They have suddenly "realized themselves." Once they were of no account even in their own eyes, but now they seem to have discovered their importance. The Rev. W. S. Hunt says :—

Boy musicians help in evangelistic work

The outcastes "realize" themselves

> This is partly the result of Christianity—perhaps, indirectly, wholly due to it. Christianity has taught them that each of them possesses an immortal soul, that the great God so loved them that He gave His Son to die for each one of them. The altogether new idea of individuality—of the importance of the individual—has been borne in upon them. But, apart from that, the seeking of them by Christianity, and now the courting of them by Hinduism because such numbers of them have been "found" by Christianity, has increased their sense of their importance. The Travancore Government has adopted various measures for "raising" them, and has promised them several boons, grants of lands, etc. The outcastes have had the new and delightful experience of being encouraged to petition Government about their grievances and even of having their petitions listened to ; and, naturally, that has wrought a change in their whole outlook. The coming into being of their "sangams," to push their cause, to demand their rights, is, I imagine, the most significant thing, both from the point of view of the State and of missions, of this last four years in Travancore ; at any rate, it was so before the war.

During the last few years many of these depressed people have become Christians, but the movement among them has been mainly in the south, and though it is gradually spreading northwards it has not yet reached Cochin. The Hindus have made strenuous efforts to arrest it, with little success, however, in the Tiruwella district, though it is thought that in some regions they may be able to make some impression.[1] In several ways, the war has rendered evangelistic work more difficult, but at the same time it has exerted a solemnizing influence on many, which should facilitate the endeavours of the missionaries and their Indian colleagues. "A general anxiety and expectancy" have been awakened, and many Hindus are talking over the prophecies of our Lord about the signs preceding the end of the world. As one of the Indian agents has said, "This is verily the right time for us to do God's work."

Movement towards Christianity

"The right time for us to do God's work"

The war has also affected the educational work in the Mission. A number of the village schools are maintained by means of contributions received from home through the Missionary Leaves Association, and these, as well as local gifts, had fallen off considerably before the end of 1914. The more advanced institutions, financed directly from head-quarters, escaped this anxiety concerning funds. At the head of them is the Cambridge Nicholson Institution at Kottayam, which consists of three departments: the divinity school, a training institution, and a model school. The divinity school has two classes. In the senior class are men who are preparing for ordination or for work as higher grade evangelists, and in the junior are those of lower general educational attainments, who will be teacher-catechists. With the latter are associated for examination purposes a number of normal students, who are called upon to take a short divinity course so that they may be qualified to combine the charge of congregations at the out-stations with their school duties. The training institution prepares men for work as elementary school teachers; and the model school is for practising purposes as well as for educating Christian and non-Christian children. At the end of 1913 three of the senior divinity students passed the preliminary theological examination, and in 1914 three old students were admitted to deacons' orders, and five (one of them a Mar Thoma Syrian) to priests' orders, either in Travancore or Ceylon. Both divinity and normal students engage in practical Christian work. The three deacons just referred to were all old boys of the College at Kottayam, which was so full that many students had to be refused admission. The scheme for the improvement of the college department, which was launched in 1908, was completed during the year under review by the opening of a new Christian hostel, which will accommodate about forty men. There is a Christian association connected with the college; some of the members act as Sunday-school teachers, others form a band to preach in the bazaars and streets, and so on. The High School at Trichur is in a flourishing condition, and the number (600) on its roll would be exceeded were the accommodation greater.

Buchan Institution

The Buchanan Institution at Pallam consists of a training class for girls and a practising school. The number of students in the training class is never large, partly owing to the early age for marriage, and partly to untrained girls often being accepted as teachers in the government schools; and in 1914 it was even smaller than usual because of disappointing results in the entrance examination. A camp for the students, the first in Travancore, was held in September with such success that it is hoped it may become an annual institution. Among those present were several old girls, who are doing excellent work, beyond the discharge of their school responsibilities, in the posts which they occupy under the Government or the Mission.

Baker Memorial School

The Baker Memorial School at Kottayam has 340 pupils, forty-eight of whom are in the high school department. Most of them belong to wealthy families; among the fathers are seventy-two government officials, seventy-four farmers and landlords, fifty teachers, thirteen lawyers, thirty-six merchants, thirty-three clergymen, and five physicians. Eight girls passed the school leaving certificate examination, and five of them entered on their arts course at Kottayam College. The three who did so in the previous year passed successfully into the senior class. These eight girls are the first to attend a public college of this kind; they are chaperoned by a matron, and sit in the same rooms with the men at the lectures, but at a desk a little apart. Some of the Christian girls teach in Sunday schools, and the Hindu pupils in the high school are said to have exchanged their attitude of stolid indifference towards the Scripture lessons for one of deep interest.

CEYLON MISSION

PAST HISTORY

Ceylon, which became a British possession in 1796, was one of the first fields to which the fathers of the C.M.S. turned their eyes. It was not, however, until 1818 that the Mission was commenced among the Singhalese and Tamils, the two races (with distinct languages) which mainly form the population of the island. For the Singhalese population, work was begun at Kandy in 1818; at Baddegama, 1819; at Cotta, 1822; and at Kurunegala and Kegalle, 1880. For work among the Tamils, Jaffna was occupied in 1818; Colombo, 1850; while the Tamil Coolie Mission was begun in 1855.

The see of Colombo was formed in 1845. Dr. E. A. Copleston is the present bishop.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The greater part of the pastoral work in the Mission is in the hands of Ceylonese clergymen, 23 in number, who are supported by native church funds; only two of the many district councils are now subsidized by the Society. Both the pastoral and the evangelistic work may be regarded as carried on in four sections, viz., in Southern and Western Ceylon; in Kandy and the Kandian Singhalese Itinerancies, among the Singhalese of the hill country; in the Tamil Coolie Mission, an itinerant mission among the labourers from South India on the tea and rubber estates; and in Jaffna, the peninsula at the north of the island.

I. The chief stations in Southern and Western Ceylon are Colombo, the head-quarters of the Mission, where pastoral and evangelistic work is carried on in both Singhalese and Tamil; Cotta, within a few miles of Colombo, and Baddegama, near the southern end of the island, where Singhalese is spoken; and Negombo, north of Colombo, where the work is in Tamil.

II. The work of the Kandian Singhalese Itinerancies is carried on in three districts, viz., the central, with Kandy as its head-quarters; the northern, worked from Anuradhapura; and the western, worked from Kegalle.

III. The Tamil Coolie Mission has three divisions, namely, the northern, the central, and the southern, with their head-quarters at Kandy, Hatton (south of Kandy), and Haputale (farther south-east) respectively.

IV. In Northern Ceylon the chief station is Jaffna, near which are Nellore and Copay. All the work is in Tamil.

The educational work is on a large scale, more than 25,000 children being under instruction in the schools. The chief institutions for male students are Trinity College, Kandy, St. John's College, Jaffna, and English schools at Cotta and Copay; and for girls, the Ladies' College, Colombo, and English schools at Cotta and Jaffna. Provision for the supply of Singhalese agents is made by means of a training class for catechists and a training home for Bible women at Kandy, while there are a hostel for male Singhalese teachers and a training school for female Singhalese teachers at Colombo and Cotta respectively, a training institution for Tamil men at Copay, and a class for Tamil women at Nellore. A training colony for male evangelists has lately been established at Peredeniya, a few miles from Kandy.

The C.E.Z.M.S. has work at Kandy and Gampola.

The work is carried on by a staff of 19 European clergymen, 2 laymen, 17 missionaries' wives, and 15 other women, with whom are associated, besides the Ceylonese clergymen mentioned above, 903 Ceylonese catechists, school teachers, and Bible women.

Deaths of Rev. F. Glanvill,

A FORMER worker in the Ceylon Mission, the Rev. F. Glanvill, died at Bristol on 15 May, 1914. He was trained at Islington College, and sailed in 1881, but the state of his health compelled him to retire after a couple of years. After his return to England he was organizing secretary first for Durham and Northumberland and then for the Metropolitan district until, in 1901, he accepted a living in Bristol.

and Rev. R. Pargiter

The Rev. R. Pargiter, another former missionary of the Society in Ceylon, passed away at Charmouth on 1 April, 1915, at the ripe age of 98. He went to Ceylon in 1844 under the Wesleyan Missionary Society, joined the C.M.S. in the following year, and was ordained in 1846. He worked in the northern peninsula until 1864, when he returned to England, afterwards for some years serving the Society at home as an organizing secretary. His son, the Rev. G. E. A. Pargiter, was principal of St. John's College, Agra, from 1883–91.

The Committee have accepted the resignations of the Rev. S. M. Simmons (after twenty-three years' service); Miss A. L. Earp; Miss L. E. Nixon, the first principal of the Ladies' College at Colombo, which was founded in 1899, and the success of which is largely due to her efforts; and Miss A. F. Horsley.

The shortage of workers

It becomes somewhat monotonous to state in chapter after chapter of this Report that the Mission of which it treats is undermanned, but it is necessary to do so in order that the condition of affairs may be realized. Two illustrations may be given of the shortage of workers in Ceylon. In 1914 the Rev. A. K. Finnimore, who was in charge of the southern division of the Tamil Coolie Mission, was called upon, through the departure of the Rev. R. P. Butterfield on furlough, to be responsible for the central division also, which gave him fourteen districts, containing between 900 and 1000 estates, and a population of 200,000 coolies, most of them non-Christians. Exclusive of school teachers, who numbered fifty-two, the staff consisted of himself, one Tamil pastor, and sixteen catechists, who were in charge of nineteen organized congregations, while services were held in all at twenty-nine centres. Again, the Rev. T. S. Johnson and a Tamil deacon were the only clergymen in the North Central Province, which covers an area of 4000 square miles, with 1100 villages and 85,000 inhabitants; and in August between 2000 and 3000 square miles of the Northern Province were also put under Mr. Johnson's superintendence.

Work in English,

While most of the work in Ceylon is carried on in Singhalese or Tamil, there is also English work at Colombo and Anuradhapura, the ancient capital of the island. At Colombo appointment to the incumbency of Christ Church, Galle Face, is in the hands of the Committee of the Church Missionary Society, but the church committee is consulted before any appointment is ratified. In the past the incumbent has nearly always been a missionary of the Society and in 1914 the Rev. W. J. Hanan was in charge. The names of 324 adults are on the church roll, but the average attendance at the services was only about one hundred, including children. Some special services were conducted in the autumn by the Rev. H. Pakenham Walsh, now Bishop of Assam. A catechist is also employed to minister to the Portuguese in Colombo; and another labours among the Malayalese from South India in that city. Most of these people are low caste, the best educated being found in the police department, a member of which, a sergeant, was baptized in 1914.

Portuguese, and Malayalese

Tamil work is maintained at Colombo and Kandy; in the Tamil Coolie Mission, among the labourers from South India on the tea and rubber estates; and in the Northern Province. Some of the people are Mohammedans, but the great majority are Hindus. Bible women are at work among the former at Colombo and at Kandy, where an open door exists among them. New work, too, has lately been set on foot among the Mohammedans in some villages near Kandy, where the women are glad to be taught to read, while at one place a school for Mohammedan girls has been established successfully. Unfortunately practically nothing is done to reach the Moslem men, and this fact prejudices the efforts to win the women. In the central division of the Tamil Coolie Mission much help is rendered by the members of the Tea Coolie Mission in London, who not only support five catechists, paying their salaries, rent, and other incidental expenses, but also show prayerful sympathy with their work. But while these friends at home, and many of the planters in Ceylon, aid the Mission, there are some superintendents of estates who refuse to allow mission work to be carried on among their labourers. As the Rev. P. A. Paukiam, a Tamil pastor, remarks, "This can be made good only by reaching the companies and proprietors in England." The coolies are reached by preaching on the muster grounds before they scatter for their day's work, and by visiting them in their "lines" when their work is over, and much is done to influence them also by means of the printed page. In one division of the Tamil Coolie Mission alone 110 gospels are sold on the average every month, most of them to Mohammedans, and more than 1000 tracts and handbills distributed.

Evangelistic work (1) Tamil

Help by the Tea Coolie Mission

What is the fruit of this work? "Ceylon knows nothing of mass movements," says the Rev. A. E. Dibben, the secretary of the Mission. "Converts have from the beginning been gained by ones and twos, and the progress is slow, but we rejoice that the Lord is working among the peoples of the country, and that the Church is year by year growing numerically and spiritually." The "ones and twos," however, add up. Forty-three adults were baptized in 1914 in the southern division of the Tamil Coolie Mission; twenty-four in the Rakwana pastorate and fifteen in the Kelani pastorate, both in the central division; seven, including a man and his two sons, the latter old mission schoolboys, at Hultsdorf, near Colombo; and two, first attracted to Christianity by reading handbills, at

Baptisms

Negombo, also in the Colombo district. Of some other converts the Rev. W. Booth writes as follows :—

Baptism of a once hostile overseer

——— is a head kangany (overseer). For some years he had been devil-priest on an estate, professing to foretell the future, and acting the magician to the accompaniment of his peculiar drum. Christianity he hated, Christians he despised. About Christ he heard at muster preaching, as well as in the "lines" where he lived. Catechists and Christian neighbours made the truth known to him. Eventually the Holy Spirit did His mighty work in his heart. He repented, received Christ as his Saviour, burnt his books of incantations, broke and threw away his drum. The same power changed the hearts of his wife and family, and in spite of the threats of his brother and relatives, the whole household received baptism. . . .

In another district a kangany was baptized in 1913, and given the name of Israel. This brought on him the hatred of his mother and elder brother, who separated themselves from him. Three months later his younger brother, who had received baptism at the same time, died. This was the cause of a fresh outpouring of abuse on him and his religion. Many urged him to abandon it. His relatives threw him over. He held fast, however, to Him in Whom he had put his trust, and by his Christian life conquered. His mother and elder brother learnt of the love of Christ, and put themselves under instruction, and were received into Christ's flock. Now they are all one in Christ.

There were also a number of inquirers, but fear of their relatives deters many from an open confession of Christ. Among individual cases may be mentioned a man who was sent to a village to start a rival to the mission school; there he came under the influence of the Christian teacher, with the result that the opponent was instructed and baptized, and became a mission agent.

(2) Singhalese

The Singhalese as well as the Tamil work can show its trophies of grace. A Buddhist priest became an inquirer at Kandy; ten women were baptized at Kegalle, and twenty adults in the Central Kandian Singhalese Itinerancy, besides several in other parts. Three of those baptized at Colombo were servants, won for Christ and prepared for baptism by their mistresses; while at Kandy a woman 90 years of age was admitted into the visible Church, whose granddaughter, an inmate of the converts' home, had been instrumental in her conversion. The Singhalese work has its own difficulties. At some places opposition is acute. It takes many forms, one being the translation into Singhalese and wide distribution of infidel publications of the Clarion Press in England, and another consisting in persistent efforts to ruin mission schools. Colombo in particular is said to be a hard field, a fact which led to some trouble with the Bible women, for they preferred visiting in Christian houses where they were received kindly and listened to with attention, to going among non-Christians. Eventually their objections to direct evangelistic work were overcome, and they were cheered by meeting with a great demand for Christian books, while in the hospital for outcaste women and at a women's dispensary they had some hopeful cases.

Servants won by their mistresses

Infidel publications

Before passing on to speak of the pastoral work, reference must be made to two institutions which are connected both with that branch of effort and with evangelistic work, namely, the Converts' Homes at Kandy—"Mowbray" for Singhalese, and "The Snuggery" for Tamils. There is a promising inquirers' class at Mowbray, and thirteen former inmates are now married to mission schoolmasters, two are Bible women, and others are engaged in various departments of Christian work. "The Snuggery" has six inmates, one of them a Mohammedan convert, baptized on New Year's Day, 1914, besides several children from distant tea estates who go to school in Kandy.

Converts' Homes

The care of the churches is largely in the hands of Ceylonese clergymen, many of whom are in independent charge of pastorates. They speak well of the church committees associated with them, which have responded capitally to the increased responsibility placed upon them in connexion with both evangelistic and educational work,[1] and on the whole have maintained or even added to their contributions, notwithstanding some decrease in means through the war. Failings, of course, were met with among the Christians, and some trouble occurred through irregular marriages, but growth in grace and in evangelistic zeal was witnessed in many, as at Cotta, where several young men and women belonging to leading families offered themselves for Sunday-school work. Many of the converts suffer from great disabilities. It is difficult if not impossible for them to attend services regularly, they are surrounded by "the foul atmosphere of heathenism, which tends to poison the mind," they are exposed to temptations to drunkenness and other sins, they have before them in some cases bad examples from Europeans—but yet they show abundant evidence of genuine, practical Christianity. Mr. Finnimore refers to a head kangany who was exercised because there were no Christians in his native village in India, and set aside a sum of Rs 700 so as to erect a building in that village to be used as a school and preaching room. He said that he was prepared to give Rs 15 monthly to provide the salary of a teacher until such time as he could earn a sufficient grant from the Government, and asked Mr. Finnimore to write to the nearest missionary, begging him to persuade the local zemindar to grant a central site for the building. Mr. Finnimore also mentions some cases of spontaneous self-extension, quite apart from the official work of paid agents of the Society. He writes from Haputale :—[1]

Spontaneous self-extension

Some twenty miles away, perched up on the edge of a precipice between 6500 and 7000 feet above sea-level, is situated an isolated tea estate, surrounded on three sides by forest frequented by a herd of elephants and where leopards abound and wild boars are plentiful. The European owner lives some miles away, and the estate is "conducted" by a "native." Till recently a Tamil Christian was the conductor in charge. This man last Easter Day brought down fourteen coolies and presented them for baptism in Haputale Church. These coolies were his spiritual children; he himself is the product of one of our schools, where he first felt drawn to Christ as a little boy, some twenty odd years ago. This convert has been instrumental in bringing twenty-eight other souls to confess their faith in Christ. Again, a little while ago, I received a letter from another Tamil conductor bidding me come as soon as I could to speak to his coolies, "for there is a great shake among them about God." Accordingly, one Sunday, a twenty mile ride brought me to the estate, after taking a Communion service for Christians on the way. Five persons were brought to me that afternoon to be interviewed; and so satisfied was I with their answers to my questions, and so impressed was I by their earnest yet humble demeanour, that I baptized them in the evening, in the presence of a small Christian congregation. Next morning at dawn, though it was a heathen festival and therefore a holiday, the conductor gathered the whole labour force on the muster ground, and they listened most intently to addresses by myself, the catechist, and our friend the conductor, who exhorted them earnestly to turn from idols to worship the living God. I have great expectations of further fruit on that estate.[1]

Some striking instances of earnestness on the part of the converts and others are given by the Rev. W. G. Shorten, who furnishes an account of the dedication of the new buildings erected to take the places of the schools which were destroyed in 1913 by fire or flood.[2] Mr. Shorten explains as follows the nature of the buildings and the reason for combining church and school in one:—

Church and school in one

In the interior villages it is almost impossible to preserve buildings which are empty for six days in the week; the woodwork gets eaten by white ants and other insects and becomes inhabited by flying foxes, bats, etc. Hence my policy has always been one good building with chancel reserved. The Holy Table is fixed in cement two feet deep and put in close to the wall; the legs fold in, the top folds down and locks at the side. This prevents it being stolen, or being used (even by the teacher) for any other purpose. The little prayer desk is also a font! The usual book pocket is turned into a "secret drawer" with a door opening in front. Attached to the inside of this door is a brass bowl. The door swings out on its hinge and the little font comes under the person's forehead kneeling for baptism. The door locks and thus the font is secured for the one purpose.

At one place, Pussellawa, the Government demanded that the schools (English and Singhalese) should be enlarged, otherwise the English school at least would have its grant withdrawn. The difficulty was to raise the money; but a man belonging to a large and influential family, who has been the means of bringing more than one member of his household to Christ, started a subscription list with a good sum, and sent his son round the district to collect more. He then began the work of enlargement himself, and also put up an extra room and a kitchen for the catechist. A few days before the opening ceremony he visited Mr. Shorten, said that he wished to bear all the cost of the work himself, and handed over what had been collected so that it might be used at some other place where the people were poorer. At another place, called Nawalapitiya, it had become necessary to restore the roof of a school without interfering with the work. An English contractor estimated £80 for the job; a Singhalese offered to undertake it for £65. But there was very little money available. So volunteers were called for, and during the Easter holidays the head teacher and many others removed the roof of a building seventy-five feet long, threw out the rotten timber, replaced it by new material, shifted 10,000 porous tiles from one part of the compound to another, painted them inside with boiling tar to render them waterproof, and replaced them on the roof. At Arangala, one of the places where the school was destroyed by flood, the Christians, old and young, joined in making 30,000 bricks and 26,000 tiles for a little church, or helped in other ways; and at Maturata the children carried for a distance of a mile all the sand used for a new school chapel. Mr. Shorten says that it is a good thing to get the villagers to assist in such ways (many besides the converts helped), for if later on Buddhist agitators visit the village and try to induce the people to open a Buddhist school, they reply, "We have our school; we don't want another." And he adds that during fourteen years he has not known a single instance of opposition succeeding where the sympathy of the villagers had been enlisted by getting them to work.

Voluntary builders

Singhalese and Tamil candidates for ordination are trained at Kottayam or Madras, but in October, 1915, the Rev. J. P. S. R. Gibson opened at Peradeniya, three miles from Kandy, what is called a Training Colony, at which evangelists are prepared for their work, and agents of the Mission may go into retreat; it is hoped also that eventually the Wesleyan Church may join in the establishment at the colony of a normal training school for vernacular teachers. Mr. Gibson began with six young teachers who needed preparation for confirmation, and four others who desired training as evangelists, and in December, when these men had gone, twelve evangelists and teachers arrived for a week's retreat. Normal training for Singhalese men is obtained at the government teachers' training college at Colombo, the C.M.S. students residing in a special Hostel; but the arrangement is not ideal, for their secular work occupies so much time that little is left for spiritual instruction. The Teachers' Training Institution for Tamils at Copay has fourteen students, while 113 boys are in the attached practising school; three of the students were baptized during the year. Singhalese Bible women are supplied by the Mowbray Home at Kandy, and female school teachers by a Training School at Cotta, where two of the students received baptism. There is also a Normal Class for Tamils at Nellore, but its tendency is to become smaller, and sickness prevented the students from doing themselves justice at the examinations in 1914.

Educational work

Trinity College

A strong patriotic spirit is shown by the boys at Trinity College, Kandy. When the Governor consented to form a Ceylonese contingent, one hundred strong, to take part in the fighting in Europe, the senior students, almost without exception, wanted to go, though their parents were not all equally keen, and one at least objected to his sons' volunteering because "there is a risk." The Rev. A. G. Fraser, the principal, turned back at once all boys who were not up to the standard as concerned age, chest measurement, etc., and then said that he would present for service only those of the remainder who could "stick" through a march to Colombo, seventy-two miles away. Twenty-four boys and five masters started, of whom six had to fall out because of bad boots, but the rest accomplished the distance. Mr. Fraser says :—

A patriotic spirit

> Of the actual marchers, eleven of the boys were selected for the hundred; the rest were considered too young. Two of the rejected ones, chiefs' sons, took a small boat and went round every ship in the harbour begging to be taken to Europe as stokers or in any capacity in the hope of enlisting. But no one would have them. Altogether of old boys and present pupils we had forty selected for the hundred. Then came the final blow ; the hundred were not allowed to go. So officially there are no Ceylonese at the front. We have seven of our boys there, however, two of our present masters, and two future masters. Four of the seven boys at the front are old prefects, and one of them has got his commission. Two have been sent home from the trenches for frostbite, one severely ; the other has got back again.

The college was very successful at the inter-collegiate athletic competitions held at Colombo, but after the war began cricket and other sports had to give way to marching, physical drill, and shooting ; and one hundred of the boys are now efficient passed cadets, while 240 hold the champion inter-collegiate cup for physical drill.

Social service

The social service union at the college continued its useful work, and its value was shown in the philanthropic activities of some of the past as well as present students. Some of the members, too, began to realize that it is hopeless to look for true social regeneration without Christianity, and one remarked that he did not think that the social work was religious enough, meaning that it was of little use to give people medicine unless they were also given hope ; this boy, a Hindu, proposed that a preaching band should go into the alleys in which social work was regularly carried on. Referring to this branch of the work Mr. Fraser narrates an interesting incident. Plague broke out in Colombo in 1913, and the attention of Government was at last seriously drawn to the awful housing conditions. The Attorney General accordingly drew up a bill to deal with the evil, and availed himself of evidence gathered by the social service union.

Later, when introducing his Bill in the Legislative Council, he warmly acknowledged his debt to the boys of Trinity College, and he wrote them a letter in which he congratulated them on helping to make their country's laws while still at school. Much searching of heart took place in answer to prayer among the members of the communicants' union; these boys help the work at a village, four miles from Kandy, both financially and by personal service. Five of the boys were baptized during the year. St. John's College, Jaffna, was reorganized in 1914, and now consists of two distinct schools, one providing a sound commercial education, and the other preparing for the university. Nineteen boys passed the senior Cambridge examination, and twenty-one the junior. No baptism took place in the school during the year, but one Hindu boy on leaving referred to our Lord as a personal friend, and said that he kept a record of the answers to his prayers. A large hall and four class rooms were added to the school buildings.

Communicants' union

St. John's College

The Ladies' College at Colombo, which has been placed under Government as a grant-in-aid school, supports an evangelist working in the Tamil Coolie Mission; six of the girls were presented for confirmation. The High School for Tamil girls at Jaffna is very full, and now earns a grant six times as great as that which it gained in 1900, although the number of children has not much more than doubled in the interval. In spite of the efforts of the authorities of the Hindu school referred to in last year's Report,[1] none of the C.M.S. girls joined it, while on the other hand twenty-seven Hindus were admitted to the Society's institution. There is a third girls' high school in the Mission, the English School at Cotta. Of the five Anglo-Vernacular Boarding Schools, those at Baddegama and Cotta were affected as to numbers by the war, while both at Cotta and Nellore the children suffered much from the unhealthiness of the year. Three girls were baptized at Cotta as a result of some special services conducted by Mr. Dibben, and the same number at Nellore; besides those who received baptism there were several other members of the catechumens' class in the Nellore school, which was conducted by the Rev. J. Backus, a Ceylonese pastor. Five inquirers are reported at the school at Kegalle; one of them, a former pupil in the boarding school at Baddegama, hailed from Balapitiya, a village on the coast where work has always been difficult. The child's parents are described as most bigoted, but her sister nevertheless is studying the Bible in her search for the truth. At most of the schools examination results were good—wonderfully so considering the handicap imposed by sickness. Industrial Classes are held at Kandy, Kegalle, and Nellore; the last named had fifteen members, three or four of whom were anxious for baptism, but it had to be deferred because their parents would not consent to arrange Christian marriages.[1]

Primary schools

The Primary Schools in the Mission number 291, with 21,935 pupils. In the Tamil Coolie Mission they are of two types, namely, estate schools and bazaar schools. In the latter most of the children are Mohammedans, and from these but few converts are won, though the teaching which they receive makes them more tolerant of Christianity. In many parts of Ceylon a great deal of sickness prevailed, and this affected the attendance at the schools, and consequently brought about a diminution in the government grants. Some difficulty was experienced in obtaining qualified teachers. The cost of the necessaries of life has trebled in the last few years, making higher salaries a matter of necessity, but the government grants, on which the Mission depends largely for the maintenance of the schools, are still made at the same rate as fifty years ago.

MAURITIUS MISSION

PAST HISTORY

Though geographically more nearly connected with Africa, the little island of Mauritius, on which the Society began work in 1856, is, in a missionary sense, a dependency of India. Two-thirds of the population are immigrants from India, brought hither to work on the sugar plantations ; and among these are labouring Hindi and Tamil-speaking missionaries. More than 7000 persons have been baptized, the majority of whom have died or returned to their own country. The diocese of Mauritius was founded in 1854. Dr. Gregory is the present bishop.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The Society has an orphanage for boys at Plaisance (see Map 15), one for girls at Rose Belle, and twelve other primary schools. Its staff (1 European and 4 native clergymen, 5 single European women, and 67 native Christian lay agents) also minister to the converts connected with the Mission, and maintain evangelistic work by means of classes, dispensaries, and itinerations.

Besides supporting the European missionaries the C.M.S. makes a grant in aid of the work on the island, which in 1914 was reduced by one-half, with a view to the gradual transfer of the work to the diocese.

Death of Bishop Royston

THE RIGHT REV. P. S. ROYSTON, who for eighteen years was Bishop of Mauritius, died at Worthing on 28 January, 1915. After taking his degree in 1853 at Cambridge with honours in both classics and mathematics, he became classical tutor at the Church Missionary College, but he did not remain there long, for in 1855, though only 26 years of age, he was appointed secretary of the Madras Corresponding Committee, and sailed for South India. Failure of health compelled him to return home in 1861, and when, a little more than two years later, he once more set forth, it was for Mauritius. In 1866 he again took up the reins of office at Madras for five years. Then came a short period of work as acting secretary of the Society at home, followed in 1872 by his consecration. He resigned his see in broken health in 1890, after thirty-five years' foreign service.[1]

Reduction in the Society's grant

In accordance with the policy of gradually transferring its work in Mauritius to the diocese, the C.M.S. reduced its grant by one-half in the summer of 1914. Indian clergymen, who have been trained at the diocesan training institution and are not connected with the Society, have now had districts assigned to them which are in the main carved out of the old C.M.S. sphere.

Pastoral work

The C.M.S. pastors, who are aided in their work by Archdeacon H. D. Buswell and some women missionaries, were enabled to reclaim a few persons who had reverted to heathenism. One of them, with his family, had been for some time under instruction with a view to baptism when he confessed that he had been baptized when 8 years of age. There are a good many weaknesses among the converts, and the difficulties of the pastors were increased by the arrival of some Seventh Day Adventists, who persuaded several of the young Christians to be rebaptized.

Evangelistic work

A fair number of converts are reported as fruit of the evangelistic work. One of them first lost his situation, and a little later was turned out of his home by his parents, because he refused to take part in a heathen ceremony. There were also a number of inquirers, including a Mohammedan who had sent to India for books in Urdu, and for Dr. Pfander's "Mizan ul Haqq"; his neighbours, aware of his leanings towards Christianity, sought to intimidate him by threats, and he was obliged to seek the protection of the police. Work on behalf of the Arya Samaj has lately been begun by an Indian doctor and his wife.

Efforts to intimidate an inquirer

The dispensary held once a week at Quartier Militaire registered more than 5000 visits of patients, and one patient asked for baptism and was given regular instruction. Some of the Society's women missionaries also accompany a European woman doctor at work in the island when she visits certain centres, and take advantage of the opportunity of teaching the patients before they receive treatment.

Educational work

Orphanages

The number of boys in the Plaisance Orphanage was sixty-three until the latter part of 1914, when funds being low and prices high it was reduced somewhat. Three of the smaller lads received baptism. Two of the children in the Girls' Orphanage at Rose Belle, the only non-Christians among the sixty inmates, were to be baptized at the end of the year. Every month or six weeks a "quiet day" is held, to which the girls look forward with eagerness. The work in the other mission schools led some boys to express their determination to embrace Christianity when older, a step which was taken by some who, as children, had been brought under the influence of Christian teaching.

CHINA

The boundaries of China contain probably one-fifth of the habitable world; the population is estimated by some at 250,000,000, by others at 350,000,000, and by others, again, at a still higher figure. The chief religions are Confucianism, Taoism, and Buddhism, but the real religion of China may be said to be ancestor worship. The pioneer Protestant missionary, Robert Morrison, of the L.M.S., reached Canton in 1808, but he could only live there as an employé of the East India Company, and China was not open to missionary effort until shortly after the Treaty of Nanking in 1842. The C.M.S. began work in 1844, and the Wesleyans, Presbyterians, and several American societies at the same time or soon after. In 1865 the China Inland Mission was founded, and is now by far the largest of the 104 missionary societies in the country.

In 1913, Protestant missionary societies in China had a staff of 1941 men and 3013 women missionaries (of whom 1441 were wives); and 650 ordained and more than 17,000 lay Chinese workers. There were then 907 stations with a resident foreign missionary, and 6215 out-stations. The Chinese Christian community numbered about 356,000.[1]

Depredations of "White Wolf"

After a long period of political turmoil, China enjoyed in 1914 a year of comparative peace. During its early months the depredations of the brigand known as "White Wolf" continued. Laohokon, in the province of Hupeh, was attacked, and in March, Dr. Froyland, of the Norwegian Lutheran Mission, was shot dead, 1500 other persons were killed and 4000 wounded, some 500 girls and young women were carried off, and property to the value of between Tls. 30,000,000 and Tls. 91,000,000 was stolen or destroyed. In April, however, it was reported that White Wolf had been prevented from entering Szechwan from Shensi, and had been obliged to cross into the comparatively desert regions of Kansu.[2]

An amended constitution promulgated

An amended constitution was promulgated by the Chinese Government on May 1, the members of the Cabinet having handed in their resignations on the day before. About three weeks later a presidential mandate was issued reintroducing the old system of provincial administration, by which the control of the military forces is placed in the hands of the central Government, and civil governors are made responsible for the revenues, industries, judiciary, and civil affairs. Shortly afterwards the names of the seventy members of the Council of State, the "Tsan Cheng Yuan," the rules and regulations of which were set forth in the presidential order referred to, were gazetted. The estimate formed of them varies. Dr. G. E. Morrison, the President's Political Adviser, says that the President has chosen "all that is best in the service of the nation"; but on the other hand the present correspondent of the "Times" in Peking characterizes the Council as "a regular mobilization of the old brigade," and affirms that "there are no young Chinese among them."[1] A similar diversity of opinion prevails as to the condition of the country and the way in which the Government is looked upon by the people. Bishop Molony says that "the Government seems to be steadily increasing its hold on the country and confidence to be increasing"; but a friend of the Chinese, who has worked among them for more than half a century, is quoted by Archdeacon A. E. Moule as writing in the summer of 1914 thus:—

Diverse opinions as to the condition of the country

> The Chinese Republic has shown itself worse in every way than the old Manchu régime; bribery is worse than ever, and no justice in the courts as usual. The people are dissatisfied, and this boasted "people's country" has created a spirit of pride in all classes; while the beautiful spirit of courtesy and politeness, China's glory at her best, has fled from the people.

Little change in remote districts

In some of the remoter parts of the country little change has taken place. One missionary in Fukien writes of bribery being as prevalent as ever, and of gambling booths, though illegal, being connived at if the officials derive any benefit from them; and another says that there is "only a sprinkling of queueless heads" to indicate that something has happened, and that the people seem to know merely that taxation is becoming worse than ever. In Szechwan, in the far west, there is much lawlessness; seventeen men were beheaded in a single day at Anhsien, and a new official at Tehyang was responsible for thirty-one executions in a fortnight.

Though China is not directly involved in the war, fighting has taken place on Chinese territory, Tsingtau, in the province of Shantung, which was seized by Germany in 1898 in retaliation for the murders of two German Roman Catholic missionaries, and subsequently leased from the Chinese Government, being captured by Japanese and British forces on November 7. Some of the missions in Peking agreed to engage in special prayer for peace on Sunday, October 18, at 2 p.m., and the President and Vice-President of the Republic, on being informed, promised to send representatives. The President, moreover, despatched telegrams to the principal cities in the different provinces requesting the Chinese Christians to pray for peace in Europe on the same day and at the same hour, and commanding the local officials to attend the services. In some places, as at Yuanchow, in Kiangsi, the officials, gentry, and people responded heartily to the President's command. "Glorious as it was to minister to them," a missionary wrote, "one's feelings could not but be saddened by the thought of this heathen nation praying for so-called Christian countries."[2]

The President carried out his intention, which was recorded in last year's Report,[3] of performing, as the representative of the nation, the sacrifice at the winter solstice on the Altar of Heaven, but the ceremonies were conducted with great haste, and some of them were omitted, owing, it was thought, to fear of assassination.[1] Sacrifices to Confucius were also revived,[2] and reports from the Fukien Province refer to a marked recrudescence of idolatry. The Rev. H. S. Phillips of Kienning says that during his twenty-six years in China he has never known idol processions so frequent; the testimony from Futsing, Kaosanshih, and Doshun is to the effect that it is long since the processions were on so elaborate a scale; and Miss E. J. Harrison, of Chungan, writes as follows:—

A recrudescence of idolatry

It has been said that the pendulum has swung from the one extreme of idol abolition in 1912 to the other extreme of greater display of devotion to idols than ever in 1914. Many of us thought that where the idols were cast out it was done by one class of the people or at most two—soldiers and scholars; it was not done because of the settled conviction of the man in the street—the village farmer and seaside fisherman—that they were valueless. These classes acquiesced, as Chinese will acquiesce outwardly, in many places, but their convictions and opinions were not altered. Many temples in Chungan are still used for other purposes than worship, for guild meetings, schools, weaving shops, and barracks, but the elaborate processions and the lavish expenditure on them, theatricals in honour of idols with huge attendances of sightseers, make us think that the pendulum has swung back, and that the time when idols will be abolished through conviction of their uselessness is not quite yet. There are many women in Chungan storing up merit by recitation of the idols' names in the temples, and by keeping the vegetarian vow. On the other hand, the annual sacrifices in honour of Confucius seemed this year to attract only a small crowd of boys as sightseers; the literary men of the city were not there, though there are so many of them.

Again, reaction was witnessed at Canton, where Confucius was more honoured than ever; while in the Pakhoi district the Rev. W. E. H. Hipwell saw a heathen procession more than a mile long, of which he gives the following description:—

A heathen procession

One of the many lamentable features of the procession was the spectacle of a man who was carried in it; his cheeks were pierced through by a long stiletto and his tongue, which protruded, was transfixed by a smaller one. This ceremony is called, "Lok Shan Kong Wa." The spirit of an idol is said to have entered into this man who had been chosen by the idolatrous priest. He speaks on behalf of the idol, praising an individual or a district which may have been liberal in supporting the temple, or blaming and warning individuals or a district which have been neglectful of such duties. Having spoken on behalf of the idol, the man pierces his cheeks and tongue, and is then carried forth in procession. It is said that he feels no pain and that no blood flows from the wounds.[3]

Reference may here be made to two great evils which have existed in China. Some doubt has been expressed as to whether the first, female infanticide, prevails to any extent, but inquiry from eighty missionaries, each of whom had devoted at least twenty years to work in China, has made it clear that the murder of girl babies, while not universal by any means, is very frequent in some parts of the country, and common in others.[1] As to the second evil, the opium habit, recent C.M.S. Reports have traced the gradual suppression of the traffic in the drug, and the efforts of the Chinese Government to stamp out the habit. In 1914 Hupeh was added to the list of provinces closed to the sale of Indian opium, British officials having declared it free from local opium and from sown poppy. In Foochow also the traffic was finally stopped, opium to the value of £10,000, which was stored in the customs, being burned. The position in the Shanghai foreign concession, however, is grievous. Between December, 1907, and December, 1913, the number of licensed opium shops in the concession increased from eighty-seven to 560; and when the British Minister at Peking and the Consul-General at Shanghai tried to induce the chairman of the Shanghai Municipal Council, which is international and not exclusively British, to reduce the number of licences, he declined to discuss the subject until after the next ratepayers' meeting. The council maintains that it is bound to protect and relieve merchants who have invested money in the trade—a contention which is strongly combated by the Shanghai Missionary Association.[2] It must also be recorded with regret that by August, 1914, only eight Powers had ratified the Opium Convention concluded at the Hague, though some others, including Great Britain, had announced their intention to do so.[3]

SOUTH CHINA MISSION

PAST HISTORY

The province of Kwangtung, in which the South China Mission of the C.M.S. is carried on, covers an area of nearly 100,000 square miles, and contains a population estimated at 25,208,900. Hong Kong was occupied by the Society's missionaries in 1862; Pakhoi in 1886; Canton in 1898; Limchow in 1902; Hokshan in 1910; Nanning in 1914; and Yunnan in 1915.

The diocese of Victoria, Hong Kong, comprises the British colony of Hong Kong, and jurisdiction in China in the provinces of Kwangtung and Kwangsi (south of the central branch of the West River), and those portions of the provinces of Kiangsi, Kweichow, and Yunnan, which lie south of lat. 28°. The present bishop is Dr. Lander.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

Four stations are occupied in the province of Kwangtung—namely, Victoria (Hong Kong), Canton, and Pakhoi and Limchow (south-west of Canton); one, Nanning, the capital, in the province of Kwangsi; and one, Yunnan, in the province of that name.

Chinese men are trained for ordination or as catechists at the Union Theological College at Canton, the C.M.S. students living in their own hostel, and there are Bible women's schools at Victoria, Hong Kong (St. Stephen's House), and Canton. A middle school is carried on at Canton for Christian boys, for whom there are also boarding schools there and at Pakhoi; while for Christian girls there are similar schools at the last named station, and also at Victoria (West Point) and Kowloon. There are also at Victoria a number of institutions not specifically for Christians, namely, St. John's Hall, a hostel in connexion with the University; St. Stephen's College, where a Christian education on modern lines is provided for the sons of well-to-do Chinese; St. Stephen's Girls' College, a similar school for the daughters of the gentry; and St. Paul's Anglo-Chinese School (for boys), where the sons of Eurasians and Chinese unable to pay high fees are received.

A hospital and leper asylum are maintained at Pakhoi, and a dispensary at Limchow. Evangelistic work is prosecuted in the numerous towns and villages of the large districts by both men and women missionaries.

The staff of the Mission consists of 14 European and 7 Chinese clergymen, 6 laymen, 12 missionaries' wives and 19 other women missionaries; 4 of the above are doctors, and 2 are trained nurses. The Chinese Christian lay agents number 135.

THE province of Kwangtung, and especially the region around Canton, continued in 1914, as in the previous year, to be in a very much disturbed condition. Acts of piracy and of robbery by armed men were numerous; clan fights constantly occurred. In October, the Revs. P. Jenkins and W. W. Rogers had a narrow escape at Pikkong, in the Tsangshing district. They were passing the night with some missionary friends in an upper room at one end of the church, a building formerly used as an ancestral hall, when, between three and four o'clock they were aroused by a noise, and woke to find the main door immediately below them in flames. Kerosine had been plentifully applied to it, and a gunpowder fuse used, but happily they were soon able to extinguish the flames. No motive for the act could be discovered, but a villager confessed that he had been given $2 to commit the deed.[1] The officials apparently do but little to put a stop to the disturbances and outrages; indeed, at times their action almost seems designed to encourage them. Mr. Jenkins writes :—

> At Naampok, a place where the C.M.S. has had work for twenty-six years, two ancestral halls were given to the Church in 1909, one for a school, and the other for services. Both were very fine buildings, and were said to be worth $17,000, i.e. £1700, though this is probably a liberal estimate. In June, 1912, more than a thousand ruffians went to Naampok and carried off all the furniture and goods from the church, school, and church members' houses. In May of the following year the same band returned and completely destroyed church, school, and every house in the village, 285 buildings in all. Two Christians were killed, and over twenty of the villagers have since died of destitution. What have the officials done? Their latest act in the case is to issue a warrant for the arrest of the Rev. Mok Shau-Tsang, the former pastor of the district, because he has been trying to get some recompense made and some kind of justice done.[2]

The European war has made comparatively little difference in the Mission, beyond placing some additional duties on the workers. All male German missionaries were called upon to leave the colony of Hong Kong, though they were treated with the utmost consideration by the Government, and Archdeacon E. J. Barnett was placed in general charge of their charitable institutions, the Berlin Foundling Home, and two homes for the blind.[3] The Government also asked that two members of the C.M.S. staff should help by acting as telegraph censors, and the Rev. C. B. Shann and Mr. H. W. Turnbull accordingly give four hours between 3.30 p.m. and 7.30 a.m. to the discharge of those duties.

The Committee have accepted the resignations of the Rev. G. A. Bunbury, the Rev. W. P. H. Hubbard, and Miss W. M. Carden.

Educational work

Theological class

St. John's Hall

The Theological Class at Canton had six members when 1914 opened. One of them died of bubonic plague in the summer, one was ordained by the Bishop of Singapore on Trinity Sunday, and three were admitted to deacons' orders by the Bishop of Victoria (Hong Kong) in Advent.[4] At the end of the year ten C.M.S. students were attending the lectures at the Canton Union Theological College, opened in October, with the names of fifty students on its roll. The C.M.S. men live in a temporary hostel under the supervision of Mr. Jenkins, who has been appointed one of the college professors. The buildings of St. John's Hall, the C.M.S. hostel in connexion with Hong Kong University, were extended so as to provide accommodation for twenty additional students. Two weekly Bible classes are held for the men, on with fifteen members, and the other, for inquirers, with about a dozen. A third class was asked for by a student from another university hall, and arrangements were made to begin it. Fourteen of the men at St. John's are Christians, and several others are earnest inquirers. But the love of pleasure which exists among the men is a hindrance to the spiritual work. Many of the students belong to wealthy Chinese families, and they are attracted by the display of the European and American places of amusement.[1] After holding the position for eleven years Archdeacon Barnett has resigned the wardenship of St. Stephen's College, Hong Kong, of which he was the founder. The college has nearly 250 names on its books, the men hailing not only from Kwangtung and Kwangsi, but also from the far-western provinces of Szechwan and Yunnan, and from Fukien and Shanghai, to the north; others have come from Australia, Singapore, Borneo, Java, Cuba, and even as far afield as Peru. One of the masters received baptism in 1914 with his wife and children, and also two of the students; but in the autumn there was a strong movement in favour of Confucianism among the boys, which led some of them for a time to refuse to join in the hymns and responses at the daily prayers.[2] St. Stephen's College aims at attracting the sons of influential families, whether non-Christian or Christian, and the fees accordingly are comparatively high; St. Paul's School, on the other hand, is intended chiefly to meet the needs of the Christian congregations in the diocese and connected with the Mission. The latter has about 260 pupils, twenty-four of whom live in a hostel. Excellent results were obtained in the Oxford Local Examinations at the end of the summer. In the senior section three out of four passed, two of them with distinction; in the junior division nine passed out of eleven, three gaining honours and five distinction; while in the preliminary section all the eleven boys who sat for examination were successful. One boy entered for the Hong Kong University matriculation examination and not only passed but also carried off the King Edward scholarship which is awarded to the candidate, born in a British colony, who takes the highest place. Several of the boys in the Sixth Form are anxious to join the staff of the school eventually, and a normal class was begun for their benefit with six members. The Scripture Union in the school has nearly eighty members, some of whom engage in Christian work, such as managing Sunday schools, and the like. Besides these schools there are two boys' schools at Canton, the High School at Holy Trinity College, which remained at Shekpaai until the end of the summer, and then was transferred to Canton, and which had seventeen boys, two of whom received baptism; and the Junior School, a primary boarding school with seventy-five pupils.

St. Stephen's Girls' College

The leading school for girls in the Mission is St. Stephen's Girls' College at Hong Kong, where there are 120 pupils, eleven of them boarders. Nearly all belong to wealthy and influential non-Christian homes, but with very few exceptions they join the Scripture Union. The Christian Union, which bands the Christian girls together for definite work by prayer and missionary effort among their fellow students and in their homes, enlisted eleven new members, making a total of fifty-two. The number seems large, seeing that the girls, as has been said, are mostly the daughters of non-Christians, but as far as can be judged all of them truly believe in the Lord Jesus, though opposition at home has prevented some of them from being baptized. Three of the pupils were baptized in 1914, and by means of a collection and the sale of Bibles, Testaments, etc., bought by the girls for personal use or to give to relatives and friends, more than £11 was raised in the school for the British and Foreign Bible Society. All but one of the fourteen candidates who entered for the Oxford Local Examination were successful, and one gained distinction. A normal class was begun during the year. Six former pupils are now teachers in the school, four of them giving their services without remuneration. By the generosity of the parents of the scholars a playground has been added to the college at a cost of £175. The number of children attending the West Point School, Hong Kong, rose in the summer from sixty to 140, but the outbreak of war led some parents to remove their children, and the attendance in the autumn sometimes fell as low as 110. The new pupils were mostly day girls, belonging to middle class non-Christian families; the boarders, who number fifty, are nearly all the children of Christians of the Anglican communion. Twenty-five girls bought Bibles so that they might not only have them in school (Bibles are provided for that purpose), but also be able to take them to their homes; and several only await the consent of their parents to be baptized. In this school also a normal class has been set on foot.

Medical work

The hospitals for men and for women at Pakhoi are now in separate compounds, the latter being a building at one time used as a girls' school and later for women's work. The new arrangement, which was made in 1913, was partly responsible for an increase of more than one hundred in the number of patients during the year under review, but the successful use of the saline treatment of cholera, a disease which the Chinese regard as incurable and fatal, undoubtedly had something to do with the larger numbers. So great, indeed, was the faith of the people in the new treatment that on one occasion they even brought to Dr. N. Bradley a child who was already dead, and were bitterly disappointed when they were told that nothing could be done. Several former patients were admitted into the catechumenate. There are two leper hospitals at Pakhoi, one for men and the other for women, containing between them 150 beds. Fifteen persons belonging to the leper compounds or the leper village were baptized, and others were under preparation. The workers have to exercise great care in preparing for Bible classes among these afflicted people on account of the wonderful knowledge of Scripture which many of them possess. The dispensary at Limchow was attended by more than 2000 persons, most of whom paid frequent visits.

Lepers' knowledge of the Bible

Three events of more than common importance occurred in connexion with the evangelistic work. The first was the occupation of Nanning, in lieu of Lingshan, as a mission station. The latter is a small city of no commercial or political importance, about thirty miles south of the West River, while Nanning, which has lately been made the capital of the province of Kwangsi in the place of Kweilin, is a great centre of influence. Early in 1914 Bishop Lander and the Revs. C. I. Blanchett and C. N. R. Mackenzie visited Nanning, and in the following May the last named took up his residence there, staying for some weeks with Dr. Clift, a C.M.S. missionary from 1901–4, who resigned on medical grounds and afterwards began independent work in the city. Many people have already migrated to Nanning from Kweilin, and these speak Mandarin only, but the earlier inhabitants understand both Cantonese and Mandarin, while there are many Cantonese merchants. The influx of population has made it very difficult to obtain premises, but with Dr. Clift's help a mission house has been secured, which, though not suitable from a health point of view, forms an excellent centre for work.

Evangelistic work
Occupation of Nanning

The second event was the sanction by the Committee of the extension of the Mission to Yunnan, the capital of the province of that name, a city containing more than 100,000 inhabitants. The Rev. W. H. Elwin has found in his work among Chinese students studying at Tokyo that more converted Christian men have returned from Tokyo to Yunnan than to any other province in China, and the China Inland Mission, unable to increase its band of workers, extended a cordial welcome to the proposal that the C.M.S. should enter the province. A former military mandarin's residence near the south gate has been procured as a mission house, and a catechist from Pakhoi began work there in 1914.

Extension to Yunnan

The third of the events referred to was not the occupation of a fresh centre, but the taking of a step which it is hoped will increase the efficiency of the work in one already occupied. The C.M.S. was late in beginning work in Canton, and for some years, almost indeed up to the present, its efforts in that vast city have been on a small scale, partly because it has had no suitable premises. But in the summer of 1914 its workers entered into the occupation of a property which Mr. Blanchett describes as follows:—

A Buddhist monastery transformed into a Christian mission compound

The site has been occupied by Buddhist monks for about 300 years. The original monks obtained permission from the ancient Government to settle here and build monasteries, temples, shrines, and other places for the convenience of the travellers who came to bury or to worship the dead in the graves on the hillsides which surround us, and thus by degrees extensive premises, such as we have to-day, grew up. Then, about one hundred years ago, some monks who lived here were found guilty of serious misconduct, and the property was seized and sealed up by the Government. This was not for long, however, as a zealous and devout monk redeemed the property from official confiscation and broke the seals, establishing the religious foundation of the institutions on a firmer basis. The places flourished during the century preceding the Boxer rebellion, but since that upheaval and the renaissance which followed it, all that these monasteries stood for has declined, and the elaborate ceremonial connected with the burial of the dead has vanished almost entirely. One of the leaders in the Revolution, Ch'an King-Wa, attempted to stop the popular practice of keeping the dead unburied for weeks or months by making it a legal offence. He was not successful, but the result of his action was to render these monasteries, temples, and mortuaries useless; hence the desire of the monks to sell and acquire property which would be more suitable for their present needs.

Removing the idols

When the missionaries took possession of the premises they found fifty-six idols, some about one foot high, many life-sized, and seven between twelve and fifteen feet in height. The monks had given their consent to the removal of these, and without it the ownership of the property by the C.M.S. would not be acknowledged by the public, but there was some difficulty in accomplishing it. Mr. Blanchett says:—

The risk of stirring up the violence of an excited and angry crowd, or of bringing about the organized opposition of some of the other Buddhist "religious houses" of priests who were sore over the property being sold to a foreign society, had to be estimated and faced. The risks existed, but they were not great, and only such as it seemed to me necessary to take. The vendors would not do the deed, our own Christian colleagues would not take the matter up, fearing the hatred of their non-Christian brethren would be so great that at least secret plots to harm them would be made. So, after prayer, and study of local conditions, and making careful arrangements I took the matter into my own hands, and the idols were removed as quietly as possible, only a few outsiders being aware that anything was happening. The first set of idols I removed with my own hands without any assistance (it was hard and heavy work), and I wondered whether the two servants I had with me would continue to be afraid to help, but they came to my aid after awhile. The portable images were secured in covered places, and the huge plaster ones broken to pieces with hoes, and the debris deposited in the lotus pond within the compound.

New out-stations

Two new out-stations were opened in the Tsangshing district, and fresh work was set on foot also at Sanhui (where the first four converts, all men, were baptized during the year) and Saicheung, small market towns in the Pakhoi district. At another place visits are paid to the out-patient department of a hospital which has been opened by a Chinese Christian doctor. Evangelistic work on the island of Hong Kong was hindered by an outbreak of plague in the early part of 1914, by a revival of Confucianism, by the war, and by a strange report in the autumn that the island was going to slip into the sea, which led many of the people to flee to the mainland. On the other hand floods and the unrest in the interior caused thousands to flock to Hong Kong, to whom there were many opportunities of imparting Christian teaching. Bible classes are held in all the large government schools on the island, and many women in the prison at Victoria listened intelligently to the Gospel. Speaking generally the missionaries had no lack of hearers, but few of them were willing to accept Christ. More baptisms, however, took place in the Pakhoi district than in any previous year, and a number of women in the region around Canton were received into the visible Church. There were several inquirers at Limchow, where the question of Sunday observance holds some back from baptism.

Hindrances on the island of Hong Kong

Several forward steps in organization were made at Pakhoi with a view to enlisting more fully the aid of the Chinese Christians. A district church council was formed, consisting of representatives of the Pakhoi, Limchow, and Lingshan congregations; some of the most prominent converts at Pakhoi banded themselves together in a missionary association, and rented a house in a large village called Kanlai, near Limchow, for the purpose of evangelistic work; and a Chinese Women's Evangelistic Committee was also formed with ten members. They take it in turns to accompany the Bible women, one woman going each week, and five once a month, and they are also responsible for providing and preparing lunch on Sundays for those members of the congregation who are blind, lame, etc., or live at a distance, so enabling them to remain for the afternoon classes. Another new venture was to make one of the Bible women responsible for visiting and teaching the inquirers at Pakhoi; she is allowed to recommend them for admission as catechumens or for baptism, and if they are accepted she arranges godmothers for them and helps them in selecting their baptismal names.

KWANGSI AND HUNAN MISSION

PAST HISTORY

Work was begun by the C.M.S. in the province of Kwangsi in 1899, when Kweilin (see Map 17) was occupied. Four years later a forward step was taken by opening a station at Yungchow, one hundred miles distant, in the province of Hunan. Hengchow, north-east of Yungchow, was occupied in 1910, and Siangtan in 1911.

The diocese of Kwangsi and Hunan was formed out of the diocese of Victoria, Hong Kong, in 1909, and consists of the province of Kwangsi, north of the central branch of the West River, and that portion of the province of Hunan which lies south of latitude 28°. Dr. W. Banister, a C.M.S. missionary, was appointed bishop, and consecrated in the year named.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The work in the Mission is chiefly educational and evangelistic. There is a middle school at Hengchow, and medical work is carried on at Kweilin.

The staff of the Mission consists, besides Bishop Banister, of 8 European clergymen, 8 missionaries' wives, one of them a doctor, and 5 other women missionaries. The Chinese Christian lay agents number 20.

A union Bible school

THE Rev. L. Byrde, whom Bishop Banister has appointed Archdeacon, spent a fortnight in September, 1914, at Nanyoh, in the province of Hunan, where with a Wesleyan and a Presbyterian he was responsible for the teaching at a Bible school attended by eighty men, of whom three were Christians connected with the C.M.S., though not mission agents. The morning of each day was devoted to classes and lectures, and the afternoon and evening were given up to tract distribution among the many pilgrims who visit the town. United evangelistic work is maintained at Siangtan, where the C.M.S. joins forces with two other missions once a week, an interchange of speakers from each gospel hall being arranged.

Kweilin

One station, Kweilin, is occupied by the C.M.S. in the province of Kwangsi, and three, Yungchow, Hengchow, and Siangtan, in the province of Hunan. No annual letter has been received by the Committee from the missionaries at Kweilin, where educational and medical as well as general evangelistic work are carried on. Four members of a young men's Bible class were baptized on Palm Sunday; a building has been secured to serve as a hostel and centre for work among the thousands of students in the city; and a temporary building, containing four rooms, has been erected for the reception of maternity cases.[1]

Yungchow

At Yungchow, about one hundred miles north-east of Kweilin, there are a small school for girls, and a day school for women at which many of the converts have learnt to read; a Bible class for Christians and catechumens is conducted weekly; and every Saturday an evangelistic meeting takes place. The attendance at this was affected for some months by the presence of a guard of soldiers at a women's temple opposite to the mission house, and directly the men were removed, the attendance doubled. Four women received baptism in 1914, and at its close two others were under instruction for that rite, while seven were being prepared for admission to the catechumenate. No information is forthcoming as to the men's work at the station.

Hengchow

Proceeding another seventy-five miles north-east, Hengchow is reached. The work here is remarkable because it is so largely among the middle and upper classes, who compose more than half of the congregation. The school for boys (some of them are married men) which had eighteen pupils at the close of 1913, grew rapidly, and before long had sixty names on its roll, but later in the year a difficulty in finding a suitable teacher of mathematics led to some falling off. The standard of the school has been raised, and it now prepares boys for the universities at Shanghai and Wuchang. The students belong to families equal socially to those at home who have titles. These wealthy people are staunch idolaters, but two of the young men refused to worship idols at their family celebrations, and some of them were willing to lead in prayer at school. There is a second school, which was opened for girls, but they were shy about coming to a building where there was also a large boys' school, and the girls' school has become a primary school for boys! There is great need for a good mission girls' school in the city, for the Government has closed all its schools in Hengchow for lack of funds.[1] A Bible class for women, which at one time had as many as sixty members, is held every week, and visits are paid to many of the wealthy people, among whom there is an open door. Two men were baptized in 1914, the firstfruits of the work, and eleven others were admitted to the catechumenate. Among the catechumens there are several master shopkeepers on the principal business street of the city who are held back because they keep their shops open on Sundays. One of them, however, has promised to close his place of business, encouraged to do so by seeing that though he has burnt all his heathen tablets, his business, instead of suffering, has prospered, so that he has been able to open a second shop, while his wife has presented him with twin sons.

Siangtan

At Siangtan, which lies about eighty miles north-east of Hengchow, the work was taken over by the C.M.S. from the American Church in 1911. The Christians show a growing corporate spirit, their gifts have increased, and they recognize more fully the obligation of Christian unity; they are also alive to the duty of preaching Christ to their heathen neighbours, and most of the evangelistic work is now carried on by voluntary helpers. The school, St. Paul's School, has more than one hundred pupils; fourteen of them were baptized during the year under review, and five were admitted as catechumens, and a growing sense of honour could be discerned among them. Sixteen men and four women were baptized at Hotung, an out-station just across the river from the city of Siangtan, where a remarkable man, Mr. Koh Hwei-Kwen, a former Buddhist monk, is the catechist.[1] Another out-station has been opened at Nganyuen, a colliery town in Kiangsi Province, nearly one hundred miles from Siangtan, where Bishop Banister has taken charge of the work, since it is more easily reached from Hunan than from the south of Kiangsi. A group of Chinese Christians have gathered in the town, who meet all local expenses; they have to endure a good deal of minor persecution, and some can only find privacy for prayer and Bible study by going out on the hills around, "a most excellent tonic for growth in grace." Several members of the congregation are zealous in teaching others, and Archdeacon Byrde on one visit admitted ten persons to the catechumenate, all of whom had been won by Chinese Christians.

FUKIEN MISSION

PAST HISTORY

The Fukien Mission has a truly remarkable history. Foochow was occupied in 1850, and the first eleven years passed without a single convert appearing. Two out of five missionaries died during this interval, and two retired. The fifth died soon after gathering the firstfruits of his labours, leaving a new-comer, the Rev. J. R. (now Archdeacon) Wolfe, in charge. Up to 1864 the work was confined to Foochow City. In that year and the following other large cities were occupied by Chinese evangelists. In 1866 the first two or three converts were baptized. Funing was occupied by European missionaries in 1882; Kutien, 1886; Loyuan, 1889; Kienyang, 1891; Hinghwa, 1893; Kienning, 1894; Ningteh, Futsing, Kengtao, and Kaosanshih, 1896; Lienkong, 1897; Sienyu, 1901; Hotung, 1903; Doshun, 1904; Sungki, 1906; Chungan, 1913; Fuan, 1914. In 1906 Archdeacon H. McC. E. Price, a C.M.S. missionary in Japan, was consecrated first bishop in Fukien. The province had previously formed a part of the diocese of Victoria, Hong Kong.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The work of the Mission is carried on at Foochow, the capital, and at many cities and villages scattered over the northern half of the province of Fukien. Three of these, besides Foochow, are "fu" (i.e. prefectural) cities, namely, Funing and Kienning, north of the Min, the river on which Foochow stands, and Hinghwa, south of it. The other chief stations are Lienkong, Loyuan, Ningteh, and Kutien, north of the Min; and Futsing and Sienyu, south of that river. The Dublin University Fukien Mission largely supports the work at Funing and Fuang and some of the educational work at Foochow.

Besides the Bishop, who resides at Foochow, the mission staff comprises 22 European clergymen, 9 laymen, 21 missionaries' wives and 51 single women. Of these 12 are qualified doctors and 12 are nurses. There are 21 Chinese clergymen, and 275 male and 326 female Chinese Christian evangelists and teachers.

The chief institutions are at Foochow, some of them in the city and others on the island of Nantai, in the River Min, where is the European Settlement. They include a divinity college; the Stewart Memorial School for Bible women; a women's normal school; Trinity College, consisting of an Anglo-Chinese school (St. Mark's College), a middle school (including normal school), and upper primary school for boys; a boarding school for girls; a hospital and union medical college; and a school for blind boys.

There are also women's schools at Funing, Ningteh, Hotung, Hinghwa, Kienning, and Lienkong; boarding schools for boys at Funing, Kienning, Kutien, Hinghwa, and Sienyu; and for girls at Kengtao, Ningteh, Funing, and Hinghwa; and lower primary day schools at a great number of villages.

Medical work is represented by hospitals at Futsing, Ningteh, Funing, Hinghwa, Sienyu, and Kienning, besides dispensaries at several stations. Work among lepers is carried on at Foochow, Futsing, Loyuan, Kutien, and Kienning.

A number of the women missionaries devote themselves almost entirely to evangelistic work, in which also the missionaries engaged at the institutions named above take part from time to time. Ladies of the C.E.Z.M.S. co-operate with the Society's missionaries in work among the women at Foochow, Hinghwa, Kienning, Kutien, Loyuan, and Sungki, and occupy a few other stations as well.

United campaign among students

A NUMBER of united meetings were held in the province of Fukien in the autumn of 1914 after careful preparation and provision for following up the effort, their object being to "enrol the most thoughtful and serious-minded students into Bible classes in order to make a careful study of Christianity, and, later on, to make decision to begin the Christian life." The Governor of the province, on his own initiative, sent a personal telegram inviting Mr. Sherwood Eddy to the district, and issued an official statement to magistrates and officials in the principal cities, explaining the nature of the proposed meetings, giving dates, and urging them to assist in all possible ways. The annual letters of the missionaries are full of references to the campaign. At Foochow, where the meetings were conducted by Mr. Eddy and Professor Robertson, the former spoke on "The Crisis in China," "Christianity the Hope of China," and "The Supreme Importance of Moral Character," while Professor Robertson gave a scientific lecture to four different audiences. More than sixty-nine weekly Bible study classes were set on foot as an outcome of the effort; the non-Christian students at the union medical college, seven in number, and nine of the boys at St. Mark's College expressed a desire to enter the catechumenate; while the men at the union theological school gained much spiritual help. Results at Funing were very similar, and a "new impetus" was given to the work. At Futsing the meetings, addressed by Mr. C. T. Uang, were attended by about 1000 people, and 400 men, one of them the city magistrate, signed a promise to read the Bible. Meetings for women were arranged at Hinghwa in connexion with the campaign, and many of the Christians were greatly helped; while at Kienning, where Mr. Yui was the speaker, about 550 men expressed their willingness to study the Bible, but only a small proportion of them attended the classes which were afterwards organized. At each centre scientific lectures on such subjects as wireless telegraphy were used as a preliminary means of attracting the people to the meetings, while a social service scheme and a health and sanitation campaign were organized to aid in the work of "following up" the effort. Dr. H. M. Churchill, of the C.M.S., aided in the last named by serving on the committee in charge of it, and writing two leaflets for general distribution, one on "Consumption and its Prevention," and the other on "Personal Hygiene." These were printed and distributed from house to house and at meetings in most of the cities where the gatherings were held.

Scientific lectures as an attraction

Union Theological School and Medical College

There are two "union" institutions in Foochow, in which the C.M.S. has a share. The theological school had 106 students in 1914, of whom twenty-five were connected with the C.M.S. In addition to the subjects taken in common the church students had systematic lectures on the Prayer Book. Seventeen men studied at the medical college, the buildings of which belong to the C.M.S.; all of them were keen on their work "with the occasional lapses which one expects from healthy youths." A summer school was held for the pastors and catechists of the three missions—the Methodist Episcopal Mission, the American Board, and the C.M.S.,—which unite at the institutions just referred to, but it was not quite as well attended as in 1913.

Death of Rev. A.W. Cribb

The Rev. A. W. Cribb, who, after being trained at Islington College, served in the Fukien Mission from 1864–71, died at Shipley on 3 June, 1914.

The Committee have accepted the resignations of the Rev. C. Shaw, after thirty-three years' service, and the Rev. Dr. S. Synge; and the name of Miss N. G. Postance has been removed from the list of missionaries on health grounds.

Literary work

The Rev. Ll. Lloyd is a member of the committee engaged in revising the translation of the Old Testament into Higher Wenli, and the Rev. J. Martin translated some articles for the forthcoming Chinese edition of the Bible Dictionary edited by Dr. Hastings.

A handsome gift

The Fukien Mission was the recipient during the year under review of a handsome gift of more than 1000 volumes for its library from Mr. Paul King, the commissioner of customs at Foochow, on his leaving for an important position in the Chinese Customs in London.

Educational work

Stewart Memorial School

Bible women are trained at the Stewart Memorial School at Foochow, where about twenty women belonging to a station class were also received, and thirty others were in a "special reading class," to which Christian and heathen women are admitted if they pay for their board. Nine women were baptized in 1914, and ten entered the catechumenate. One woman, who had just begun her preparation for work as a Bible woman, had to be dismissed for marrying her daughter, a baptized woman, to a non-Christian.

Women's schools

The Women's Schools in the Mission are seven in number, exclusive of that at Funing. In some of these a few women are trained as Bible women, but their chief object is to give the Christian women more systematic instruction than they can get at their homes. The number at the school in Foochow City was smaller than usual owing to the introduction of a charge of $3 a term, a sum which in addition to the cost of books, etc., is beyond the means of many of the converts. Most of the women in the school were young, and very few were preparing for definite evangelistic work.

Station classes

One of the students at Hotung was baptized. A station class differs from a women's school in that it is intended for inquirers rather than for Christians, and that the period of residence is often shorter; but the distinction is not always maintained. The class at Sienyu is of special interest because it is left in charge of the wife of the Chinese pastor. One woman belonging to the Doshun class, and one to that at Kienyang, were baptized.

Women's Normal School

The Women's Normal School, which was opened at Foochow in April, 1913, with ten students, only two of them, however, with any claims to be regarded as "normal" students, and a practising school of about twenty children, made decided advance in 1914, and had twenty-five students, while between forty and sixty children were in the practising school. Some of the women were young widows, but the majority were girls who intend to devote some years to school work before they are married. The students do a good deal of visiting in the homes of the children of the practising school, and they also carry on a Sunday school. The Girls' Boarding School at Foochow celebrated its jubilee in the summer of 1914, a reunion of former pupils, of whom about one hundred assembled, being a feature of the occasion.[1] The school now has 250 names on its roll. Four of the pupils in the boarding school at Lienkong received baptism early in 1913, but since then few have shown any desire to follow their example. At Kengtao visits are paid to the surrounding villages on Sunday afternoons by some of the teachers and girls, and the latter acquit themselves well both in speaking to non-Christians and in teaching the Christian women and inquirers. One of the elder girls at Ningteh was sent to a kindergarten training class at Kutien with a view to her eventually starting that form of work in connexion with her old school. Here may be mentioned also the Schools for the Blind at Foochow. That for boys has seventy-eight names on its roll,[2] and there are fifty pupils in that for girls. The girls range in age from twenty-seven years to nine months; the elders among them spend most of their time in industrial work, weaving cloth, making matting, etc. Thirteen of the girls were baptized in 1914. In addition to the schools which have been mentioned, there are about 160 elementary schools, containing in all nearly 3000 pupils.

Training school for nurses

Five new probationers were admitted to the Training School for Nurses at Futsing, but one of them had to be sent home as unfitted for hospital work. At the end of the year, besides the four remaining probationers, there were eight girls almost at the end of the second year of their course; four "staff nurses," who had been under training for three years and a half; and two "sisters," working for an extra certificate. At Kienning the C.M.S. workers co-operated with those of several Chinese societies in the city in an attempt to help the poorer classes to break off the opium habit, the Chinese providing the money for food and other expenses, and the missionaries being responsible for the needed drugs and for medical care of the patients. To begin with, the movement was successful, and in less than three months 150 people, most of whom gave a ready hearing to the Gospel, put themselves under treatment; but then there was a great falling off, and but few applied for help. The reason for the change is thought to have been that at first, the province having just been declared free from opium, the drug was very expensive, but then it became cheaper, and the poorer people found, moreover, that they had little to fear from the officials. Six branch dispensaries are superintended by the doctors at Kienning, and that at Chungan, under a Chinese medical man, was the means of leading a number of young men connected with influential families to attend Bible classes. At the women's hospital at Ningteh, an important county town, not only were more patients received than in 1913, but they were also of a better class socially. One interesting case was that of a lad who was brought to the hospital apparently at death's door from bronchitis. He was the last survivor of four children, and both his parents declared that if he died they would commit suicide. Happily his life was spared, and the father and mother thereupon fulfilled their promise that in that event they would "do worship to God," and attended the services with more or less regularity. The statistics show an increase in the number of in-patients in the women's hospitals at Foochow and Futsing. At Kaosanshih, a branch dispensary of the Futsing hospital, one patient was baptized and several became inquirers. Miss K. Andrews, a trained nurse, who is in charge at Kaosanshih, says that superstition is so strong among the people that very careful teaching is required lest they should merely change from one form of superstition to another; "outward forms and symbols are dear to the Chinese heart, and some believe more in the efficacy of the Bible or Prayer Book as a pillow for a sick person's head than in the spiritual application of their contents!"

The chief event of 1914 in the evangelistic work was the reoccupation of Hotung by European missionaries after the lapse of six years. The work in the villages of the district was distinctly hopeful, especially in two different parts from which the Bible women hailed. Of one of the women Miss K. L. Nicholson says:—

Hotung reoccupied

> Before she became a Christian she had very great sorrow upon sorrow, and was utterly crushed and hopeless; now she has the promise of St. Matthew xi. 28 fulfilled in herself, and the rest and joy are so apparent that those who knew her best and most intimately before, marvel at the change, though they personally know nothing of Jesus Christ. As a result of the alteration evidenced in her, one of her distant relatives, who was also in "continual sorrow" has come to the women's school here since our visit in February. She, too, is already much less sad and hopeless.

The readiness to listen to the Gospel shown in the villages around Hotung was not exceptional. At Chungan, a new station in the extreme north of the province, which was opened in 1913, the missionaries have free access to all classes; the literati and gentry are most friendly; and one of the most prominent men in the county, if not the most prominent, has signified his intention of seeking baptism. In the Kienyang district, again, at Cudonggai, a great number of men and women began to attend the services early in 1914. Several of the missionaries, those at Futsing being the chief exception, speak of the friendliness of the people. The remark is constantly heard, "The words are good," but there the matter ends, and only a few of the many who listen to the Gospel accept the invitation which is given to attend services and hear more. Referring to this characteristic the veteran missionary, Archdeacon J. R. Wolfe, who is now in his fifty-fourth year of service, says that while the attitude of the Chinese has vastly changed for the better since the days, not very long ago, when a missionary or catechist preaching about Christ was hooted out of the streets, yet in those days of persecution more people were added to the Church than at the present time.

Fewer converts than in days of persecution

Insufficiency of the mission staff

Among the reasons which are assigned for the comparatively slow progress which is made is the insufficiency of the staff. In the Kienning district several new centres might be opened with good prospect of success were men available, but the number of Chinese agents, instead of increasing, has diminished. Again, in a village in the Hotung district, one of the literati, who had heard the Gospel a few times, offered to lend a room in his house free of charge if a catechist or some Christian teacher would go and live there and conduct services or carry on a school, but it was impossible to take advantage of the offer. The population is so dense in Fukien that it is out of the question, with the forces available, to visit the villages with sufficient frequency to afford much hope of result. Archdeacon Wolfe says that in the district in his charge, extending on both sides of the River Min for a distance of one hundred miles, there are thousands of towns, villages, and hamlets, "most of which have never yet been visited by a messenger of the Gospel"; and Miss E. Mort states that though her lot lies in a county where the C.M.S. has more workers than in any other part of the province, yet she has been to villages where the women had never before seen a foreign lady or heard the Gospel.

Many unevangelized villages

But while all this is true, there is another side of the picture. In the Hinghwa district a big movement towards Christianity is in progress, and about 2000 new "hearers" were added to the Church register; while in the Sienyu district, in the same part of the province, ninety-three persons were baptized in 1914, and 118 new catechumens admitted. Ten persons were baptized in the Haitan pastorate, and there were about the same number of new inquirers; sixteen adults were admitted into the visible Church at Loyuan; Archdeacon Wolfe reports the baptism of ten adults, among them four women, the last to be won for Christ of a complete family of seventeen members [1]; and three boat-women were baptized at Foochow. Some Sunday schools are carried on in Fukien, but in most cases the number of pupils is small, and a difficulty is experienced in finding teachers.

Pastoral work

The great majority of the Christians in the Mission are poor, and unable to do much in the way of self-support. In some parts the local church councils provide the salaries of their pastors and of some other workers, but means were straitened in 1914, and the outlook for 1915 was dark, at least in the Loyuan district; the church council there, however, is "facing the position with courage and determination to do its utmost to avoid dismissing any of its agents." It is of great importance that the work of these pastoral agents should be maintained, for when one is withdrawn it often happens, not unnaturally, that the converts fall away, seeing that there is no one among them who can conduct services. They are confronted with many temptations, from which Christians at home are exempt, in the form of persecution, being deprived of their share of ancestral feasts if they do not join in the sacrifices at the graves, and so on. But many of them show much steadfastness. In the Futsing district the congregations increased in number and in faithfulness, and displayed greater interest than before in Bible study; many of the Kengtao Christians did their best to impart a knowledge of the Gospel to others; the helpfulness of the pastor's wife at Ningteh is singled out for special mention; and at Kaosanshih several instances of strong faith occurred. One of them may be given in Miss Andrews's words. She writes:—

Financial difficulties

Steadfastness of Chinese Christians

Some years ago a widow from a village called Sageng became an inquirer. Her motive seemed to be a desire for something better than she could find in her own way of life, and she became a sincere Chrisitan. She received baptism, as did her son and son's wife. The former is now trading in Japan. The latter was taken ill three months ago with typhoid. This girl was betrothed, when a baby, and her mother is a great believer in the idols. She came to help nurse the girl, who was ill for seventy-three days before she died. During this length of time the widow was approached by her own people—her brothers-in-law, who have a great voice in such family matters, and other relatives—who tried to induce her to go to idols on behalf of her daughter-in-law. The girl's own mother also brought all the pressure she could to bear upon the mother-in-law, and said to her many times, "It is all very well for you; if you lose her you can get another daughter-in-law, but you cannot give me another daughter." All the woman replied was, "Any doctor you recommend, any medicine, however costly, I am willing to get; but go to idols I will not." And that frail little woman, although her son was away, withstood them day by day, and remained constant to the end. Imagine the strain.

Strong faith

Dublin University Fukien Mission

Educational work

Trinity College

The Dublin University Fukien Mission largely supports and entirely mans the work at Funing and Fuang, and at Trinity College, Foochow. Trinity College consists of three institutions in one compound, namely, St. Mark's College, an Anglo-Chinese school, which in 1914 was affiliated to St. John's University, Shanghai; a middle school; and a junior boys' boarding school. Four of the students at St. Mark's were baptized at Whitsuntide. Several left during 1914 for responsible positions, two passing into the Eastern extension Telegraph service, and one into the Chinese postal service. The Women's School at Funing was closed during the year, and the Girls' Boarding School at that city had fewer pupils than in 1913, owing in part to the opening of a government school for girls, which offers a free education. Two Christian girls were sent to the normal school at Foochow for training; and some of the non-Christian pupils asked for baptism.

Funing Girls' Boarding School

Medical work

The men's hospital at Funing, for the first time for thirty years, was self-supporting. There was a large increase in the number of patients both there and at the women's hospital, where the systematic training of nurses was begun, with four members of the class. The patients in both hospitals were attentive to the teaching given, and ten women were admitted to the catechumenate.[1]

Evangelistic work

Fuang occupied

The hopes and prayers of many years were fulfilled in 1914 by the occupation of Fuang, a city about forty miles west of Funing, where Miss J. E. Clarke and Miss A. M. Heard took up their residence in April. They found the people most friendly and ready to be visited, and were able to open a school for girls, which was attended regularly by seventeen pupils, the fact that a small fee was charged militating against larger numbers. An English class for masters in government schools was held at Funing.

CHEKIANG MISSION

PAST HISTORY

China, north of lat. 28°, became the sphere of a separate episcopal jurisdiction, "North China," in 1872, Dr. Russell, of the C.M.S., being the first bishop, and residing in Ningpo. In 1880, after his death, the diocese was divided into two, North and Mid China, and Dr. G. E. Moule, of the C.M.S., became bishop of the latter see; he retired in 1907, and was succeeded in the following year by Dr. H. J. Molony. The Protestant Episcopal Church of America appointed a missionary bishop to China in 1844, who reached Shanghai with a band of missionaries in the following year. In 1908 by an agreement with the American bishops, the province of Chekiang was recognized as Dr. Molony's sphere of episcopal jurisdiction, and his title was changed to "Bishop in Chekiang." The first C.M.S. missionaries reached China in 1844, and Shanghai was occupied in 1845; Ningpo, 1848; Hangchow, 1865; Shaohing, 1870; Taichow and Chuki, 1892; Tunglu, 1913. In the earlier years of the Mission much success was, by the divine blessing, achieved in the numerous towns and villages around Ningpo. Later, in 1877, the Gospel was introduced under striking circumstances into the Chuki district from Hangchow, and again in 1886 into the district of Taichow from Ningpo.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

Excepting at Shanghai, in the province of Kiangsu (see Map 18), the commercial metropolis of China (where the Society has an Anglo-Chinese school for non-Christian boys and several day schools, and also maintains general evangelistic work and work among women), the operations of the Mission are carried on in the province of Chekiang. Ningpo, one of the first five ports in China to be thrown open to foreign trade, and Hangchow, another treaty port, are the chief stations, the others being Taichow, to the south of Ningpo, and Shaohing, Chuki, and Tunglu, east, south-east, and south-west respectively of Hangchow.

The more important educational institutions are Trinity College (with its theological class and normal school) and a women's school, at Ningpo; Bible women's classes at Shaohing and Taichow; an Anglo-Chinese school at Shaohing; the Mary Vaughan High School for girls at Hangchow; and boarding schools for boys and for girls at Ningpo, Taichow, Hangchow, and Chuki. The great majority of the pupils in these institutions are the children of Christians.

Medical work is represented by hospitals at Hangchow, Taichow, and Ningpo. In connexion with the Hangchow hospital there are a lepers' home, maternity home, etc.

The European staff of the Mission consists of Bishop Molony, 16 other clergymen, 13 laymen, 25 missionaries' wives and 27 other women missionaries; 8 of the above are doctors and 5 are nurses engaged at the mission hospitals. There are also 23 Chinese clergymen, and 148 Chinese Christian lay agents. The Chinese Church Missionary Society has an ordained missionary and two lay evangelists in the Hangchow district.

Special meetings for students

THE five Protestant missions working in Hangchow united in 1914 to promote some special meetings for students which were held in September. A theatre, the largest building in the city, was placed at the disposal of the organizers, rent free, though doing so involved cancelling the production of an important play, and the managing director said that if the shareholders complained of loss of profit, he himself would make up the loss out of his own pocket. The Minister of Education granted three half holidays to all the government schools and colleges, so that the students might hear Mr. Sherwood Eddy, and on the first two afternoons the theatre was packed, not once merely, but twice, for so many were unable to get into the building that the meetings had to be duplicated. On the third day the attendance was smaller, as Mr. Eddy had discouraged those who were not in dead earnest from coming. About 1000 men signed cards containing a promise to read the Bible, and though this does not necessarily imply that they have any interest in Christianity, since they may desire merely to become familiar with the Biblical allusions scattered in English literature, yet it gives the missionaries a great opportunity. On the second night of his stay in Hangchow, Mr. Eddy was entertained at dinner by the military Governor, and afterwards was asked to address the other guests; while the Commissioner for Foreign Affairs, who had decided a year previously to become a Christian, but was delaying open confession of his faith until he left office, resolved to come out at once on the Lord's side, and the following Sunday was baptized in the Presbyterian Church.[1]

The same missions as joined in the effort among students combined again in December to celebrate the jubilee of the missionary occupation of the city by the Rev. G. E. Moule, afterwards Bishop in Mid China, in 1864. The Rev. H. W. Moule, a son of the late Bishop, and the Rev. H. Taylor, a son of the late Mr. Hudson Taylor, were among the speakers.[2]

Conbined efforts.

The five missions working in Hangchow united also in a summer school for Chinese workers, and began general combined evangelistic work. The Protestant missions at Ningpo, likewise, have arranged for a monthly distribution of tracts in all the shops of the city and its suburbs, dividing the district into some forty sections, and distributing about 10,000 tracts each month. Each distribution is preceded by a united prayer meeting. Again, at Shaohing the C.M.S. co-operates with the American Baptists in educational work, and in conjunction with them and the representatives of the China Inland Mission carried on a special evangelistic campaign in the summer of 1914.

Need of more women workers

In a report with which he has kindly furnished the Committee Bishop Molony speaks of a great lack of foreign women workers in his diocese. He says that a few years ago the C.M.S. had four women missionaries working in the villages around Ningpo, three or four in or near Hangchow, three at Shaohing, two in Chuki, and two in the Taichow district, besides those engaged at schools; but when he wrote there were but two women missionaries at Shaohing, and one each in the Hangchow and Taichow districts. The Bishop pleads, therefore, for twelve new women for this work alone, pointing out that whereas Trinity College at Ningpo is turning out capable men who can compete in efficiency with the foreigner, a high-class female agency cannot be so readily raised up, and therefore foreign women are needed. Young Chinese women "are trained, and then lost to the work or heavily handicapped by home duties at marriage, and it is only elderly widows that can be sent out to the country work; yet it is there that they are most needed."

Death of Rev. R. Palmer

The Rev. R. Palmer, rector of Chilthorne-Domer, Yeovil, who passed away suddenly on 25 June, 1914, was a C.M.S. missionary at Shaohing in the Chekiang Diocese from 1870 to 1878. After his retirement on health grounds from the work in China he was for ten years organizing secretary in the Midlands.

Literary work

Mr. A. J. H. Moule continued his work of translating Edersheim's "Bible History" into Chinese; while the Rev. T. Gaunt revised the translation of a book entitled, "Preparation for Confirmation." Miss D. C. Joynt was engaged in rendering Turton's "Truth of Christianity" into Chinese.

Educational work

Trinity College

Trinity College, Ningpo, consists of a theological class, which in 1914 had seven members, three in their second year and four in their first; a normal class, in which four men were reading; a middle school; and higher and lower elementary schools. A Chinese scholar, who joined the staff in 1913, was admitted as a catechumen. Owing to want of funds the college was closed for the winter holidays a month earlier than usual.

Anglo-Chinese Schools

One of the assistant masters and one of the boys at the Anglo-Chinese School at Shanghai were baptized at Christmas, 1913. The scout movement has lately taken hold in China, and two patrols were formed of boys belonging to the school.

"Extraordinary attention" to Scripture lessons

The similar school at Shaohing, which had been closed for a time in consequence of the insubordinate spirit shown by the boys, was reopened in the spring of 1914, and by the end of the year had the names of fifty-eight boarders and fourteen day scholars on its roll. Of these twenty-six were Christians, and eleven were inquirers. "Extraordinary attention" is paid by the lads to the daily Scripture lessons; more than twenty of them expressed their intention of investigating the teaching of the Bible, and a class was formed to aid them in carrying out their purpose.

Training Bible women

Two Bible Women's Training Classes are held in the Mission, one at Shaohing, which had three students in 1914, and the other at Taichow with two members. One of the former was a woman who could live in comparative luxury with a married daughter, but as in that case she would be expected to help in making spirit money and to take part in heathen ceremonies, she gave up her prospects of temporal comfort, and devoted herself to preparation for Christian work.

Women's schools

At Taichow there is also a Women's School, in which Christians and inquirers are received for instruction; as a rule the students are from the country districts, but women from the city are also admitted if there is room for them. It had six members in the spring term. The building of the women's school at Ningpo is used for a variety of classes. Early in the year it was occupied by about forty Christian women, who desired to attend a convention being held in the city. Then it was used for one month for a station class, which appears to have differed from a school solely in lasting for a shorter period; three of the thirteen members received baptism. Finally came the women's school with about twenty students; one was baptized towards the end of the year, and others were under preparation for baptism or for admission as catechumens.

Mary Vaughan High School

Many of the thirty-eight pupils at the Mary Vaughan High School at Hangchow are the daughters of officials, and this involves one great drawback to the work, for their fathers are frequently moved, and the girls are lost sight of. One of the children was baptized in January, 1914; she has been the means of inducing seven of her cousins and friends to enter the school, and her purpose in so doing was simply that they might hear the Gospel. Many of the other children are said to be Christians at heart, and a young widow, one of the first to enter the school, is likely soon to seek baptism. There are two Girls' Boarding Schools of higher elementary standard, and three of lower elementary standard, all of them intended for the relatives of Christians or inquirers. The school at Ningpo has sixty-five pupils, two of whom receive some normal training; a weekly class is held for four girls who wish to be baptized. Two of the children at the Hangchow school were also under instruction for baptism. Although that school cannot take more than thirty-three pupils, it has a good record; seventeen former pupils are teachers or have for some time been engaged in teaching, and eight others have had training as hospital nurses, though they have not taken up that work as a profession. Another former pupil has lately inaugurated and carried on a day school at her own home, in which the Bible is taught, and which now has more than twenty pupils. Of the lower elementary boarding schools that at Taichow is full, and greatly needs further accommodation; five of the elder girls were betrothed during the year to agents of the Mission. The mission day schools in Chekiang are often small, and in the Chuki district there has been a good deal of prejudice against them in the past. At one time in the summer of 1914 rumours were in circulation in that neighbourhood to the effect that the names of children in the schools, whether mission or non-Christian, were being written down on paper, and would be taken to where foreigners were building a railway bridge and put into the foundations, a procedure which, it was believed, would cause the children's death. Two girls belonging to mission schools in southern Taichow were received as catechumens, and a couple of women whose children were in the schools became inquirers; while in the Ningpo district a woman was baptized, the fruit of the work in a day school thirty years before.

Prejudice against schools

Dr. D. Duncan Main refers in his annual letter to the great need of qualified medical men which exists in China. He says :— Medical work

Need of medical men in China

The Chinese system of medicine is unworthy of the name, and in its degenerate empirical methods the marvellous discoveries of modern science play no part. The death rate in China is truly great and appalling. Epidemic diseases, except perhaps plague, are not being carefully studied, nor is scientific research being carried out with results which will bear fruit, except by medical missionaries, or special commissions from home. Sanitary measures are practically unknown and little is being done along this line, except by our graduates, whose knowledge must tell, more and more, in spreading enlightenment as the days go past. The work that these men do is very great, more so than we realize perhaps, in view of the difficulty of their task in introducing Western methods in the face of ancient customs and superstitions to which the mass of the people are very strongly wedded. At present they have to go slowly, but there are hopeful signs of improvement increasing all around us, for which we are truly thankful. Quinine is now recognized as a cure in malaria even by the native quacks, and vaccination as recognized and practised by the Government is on the increase every year.

Training students and nurses

Medical students are trained at each of the hospitals at Hangchow, Ningpo, and Taichow. At Hangchow, where a new out-patient department has been provided, and a new leper refuge is being built, a class for training men nurses has been formed, with about twenty members. Every Sunday they hold services in the wards for the benefit of those patients who are too ill to attend chapel. In several instances the doctors were encouraged by witnessing spiritual fruit of their work. A boy who was first taught while an in-patient at Hangchow, and whose instruction was continued after he left the hospital, was baptized; and six inmates of the leper asylum by the West Lake were to be admitted into the visible Church at Christmas. At the Ningpo hospital a student from Shanghai when near his death was asked, "Do you believe in the promises of Christ Jesus?" and replied, in schoolboy language, "I believe in Him most awfully"[1]; and at Taichow a beggar boy was baptized, a woman who learnt the Gospel while a patient was to be baptized in November, and there were several inquirers, including a soldier, influenced by a tract which he had received about two years before, and a woman, who had spent some months in hospital as attendant to a young patient.[2]

Evangelistic work

Tunglu occupied

The number of stations in the Mission was increased in the summer of 1913 by the occupation of Tunglu, a small but growing town on the Hangchow River, sixty miles south-west of Hangchow, where the work has been taken over from the China Inland Mission. The lapse of three years between the retirement of the C.I.M. worker and the advent of the Rev. H. Castle had caused the inquirers to become scattered, but when services were resumed in the city fairly good congregations assembled, and by degrees Mr. Castle was able to get into touch with quite a number of people who had shown an interest in the Gospel in former days; six of them asked for baptism, and when Mr. Castle wrote his annual letter he was hoping shortly to administer the rite to them. Diligent visiting in the villages revealed the existence of many opportunities, and three places were selected as suitable for occupation as outstations. Mr. Castle, writing in December, sums up the year's work by saying that "regular visiting has been done and services held in the city; thousands of tracts have been distributed, hundreds of gospel portions sold, and the Gospel preached in more than one hundred villages and hamlets; a large number of sick persons have been attended to; friendly advance has been made among the better classes; and at the present time the outlook is distinctly hopeful." [1] Another new effort was at Vaenkong, ten miles from Shaohing, where a preaching room was opened, and five men, two of them schoolmasters, were admitted to the catechumenate. In that same district two men and two women were baptized at Lingpu; lantern services in the country towns and villages are generally well attended, a good many women are inquirers, and a hopeful class is held in the city composed of twelve young men, who meet three times a week for the study of English and the Bible. Of one of the inquirers Miss I. S. Clarke writes as follows—

Summary of a year's work at a new station

Result of a chance meeting

On one occasion I was going with the Bible woman to visit an inquirer in a village some distance away from where I was staying; not knowing the way, we inquired of an old man on the road who offered to take us to the house. As we walked along, and afterwards when we reached our destination, we talked to him and to the women who gathered together to hear of the wonderful salvation to be found in Christ. Unknown to us, the old man then and there decided to accept this salvation. Since then he has told me that he used to be a zealous Buddhist, walking many miles once or twice a year to a far-away mountain, in order to worship a certain idol, and spending what for him would be a considerable sum of money. From that first day when he heard the Gospel he made up his mind that he would no longer make that pilgrimage, and he has kept his word, and is now a very regular attendant at the Sunday services.

But with all these signs of encouragement, two of the missionaries lament that progress is very slow, and one says that the new Christians are only numerous enough to fill the places of those lost by death or removal; the statistics of the Mission, however, show that the number of baptized Christians in the district where she is at work nearly doubled during the five years between 1907 and 1912. A good many baptisms are reported from some of the stations, especially those in and around Ningpo. In the Ningpo city pastorate twenty adults were baptized or under preparation for baptism; twenty-four adults were received into the visible Church at Tsonggyiao, in the Tzeki pastorate; the same number in the Western Hills pastorate; eight adults at Tsongtsen; and so on; while at Chuki, south of Hangchow, seventeen adults were baptized, ten of them at a chapel opened in 1913 in the most lawless part of the town. The annual letters speak, moreover, of a widespread preaching of the Gospel by means of lantern services, of work among the crowds visiting the local temples and at the markets in the Taichow district, of tract distribution, of talking to individuals at work in the potteries near Chuki, and so on; and there is little, if any, mention of opposition to Christianity. In due time the harvest will come.[1]

Wide-spread preaching

There are twenty-four Chinese clergymen in Chekiang, and their spheres of work are thus described by Bishop Molony:—

Pastoral work

> Fourteen Chinese clergymen, including Archdeacon Sing, are in parochial charges under the church councils; two of these parishes, Ningpo and Hangchow cities, have been entirely self-supporting for some years, others are almost so, the three in Chuki being helped by only a small grant from home, the shortage being made up by Hangchow. Seven clergymen are engaged in evangelistic or semi-pastoral work under the Mission. Three of these have held parishes under the native Church, but not having proved successful in that difficult capacity have returned to work under the Mission. . . . Of the remainder two are masters at Trinity College and one is employed by the Chinese C.M.S. and is doing a good evangelistic and pastoral work.

Poverty of the Christian

It is not easy for the Christians to attain to self-support, for most of them are very poor, and they are so scattered that ministering to them is attended with much difficulty. The Rev. S. Yuih-Ming, of the Tzeki pastorate, for example, has six churches under his care in a district which extends for forty miles from east to west. At three of them he administers the Holy Communion once a month, and the fourth Sunday he devotes to one of the other churches. One of the centres where the Holy Communion is administered is Lohkobu, but the nearest Christians live about two miles away, and some have to walk five or ten miles in order to attend the services. In such a case arrangements are sometimes made for food to be provided, so that the people may stay for the afternoon service; this is done at Tsonggyiao, another centre in the pastorate; but the Lohkobu Christians are too poor to be able to afford such help. In various ways efforts are made to strengthen the agents and other converts. Monthly meetings are held at Ningpo for the workers in that district; a three weeks' station class was conducted at Tsonggyiao, on the initiative of the pastor, for men preparing for baptism or confirmation; classes lasting for ten days were arranged at two village centres in the Shaohing district for Christian women; and Bishop Molony and the Rev. H. Barton conducted a week's special services at Kwunhaewe, the central church of the Sanpoh pastorate, north of Ningpo. Some of the Christians are anxious to win others, as a cobbler in the Tzeki pastorate who a few years ago gave up a room in his house for services, which are conducted by the theological students at Trinity College, with the result that the seven or eight Christians in his village have become thirty; a former Bible woman in the Taichow district, who now has, in her own words, "promised God half her time," and spends her afternoons in voluntary effort to testify of her faith; and the Christian women and elder girls at Wangdza and Nyienu, who are enthusiastic in helping at the Sunday schools. The condition of the Taichow Church has for some time been causing anxiety, and Bishop Molony says that many of the church members are such only in name and never attend services. "There are bright places," he adds, "but the Church needs pruning, and it must be done prayerfully and patiently."

WESTERN CHINA MISSION

PAST HISTORY

The province of Szechwan was occupied by a party under the Rev. J. H. Horsburgh in 1892, but for more than a year it was impossible to rent houses in any place not already occupied by other societies. The cities of Chungpa, Anhsien, Sintu, Mienchuh, and Mienchow received resident missionaries in 1894; Shihchuan in 1895; Chungkiang and Tehyang in 1903; Mowchow in 1906; Lungan in 1911; and Hanchow in 1913. In 1895 the Rev. W. W. Cassels, a missionary of the China Inland Mission, was appointed Bishop in Western China, and was consecrated in October of that year.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The district which constitutes the sphere of the C.M.S. may be described as an oblong, some 150 miles long and 80 miles broad, covering an area of about 10,000 square miles.

Mienchow, Chungpa, and Lungan are on the Fow River, while Mowchow is on the Min River, another tributary of the Yangtse, farther west. The remaining stations lie more or less in the intervening area. Much territory is waiting to be occupied, especially in the north and west of this district.

The work is still for the most part directly evangelistic, and is carried on by means of meetings in preaching-rooms, lantern lectures, receiving the people in guest-halls and visiting them in their homes, and by means of bookshops and colportage.

The majority of the schools are junior primary day schools. There are, however, a diocesan training college at Paoning and a hostel at Chengtu, in which the C.M.S. co-operates, and a women's school and boarding schools for boys and girls at Mienchow.

There is a medical mission at Mienchuh, and dispensary work is carried on at many of the other stations.

The work of the Mission is in the hands of Bishop Cassels, 16 other clergymen, 7 laymen, 19 missionaries' wives and 13 other women missionaries. One of the above is a doctor and 1 a nurse. With these are associated 55 Chinese Christian lay agents.

THE Committee have accepted the resignation of the Rev. O. M. Jackson, after twenty-four years' service.

Bishop Cassels held confirmations at all the Society's stations in his diocese with the exception of Lungan and Hanchow. He also visited most of the stations in the sphere of the China Inland Mission, and consecrated the cathedral at Paoning.

Consecration of cathedral at Paoning

Diocesan institutions

Two of the missionaries of the C.M.S. in Western China are engaged at diocesan institutions; namely, the Rev. H. H. Taylor on the staff of the training institution at Paoning, and the Rev. J. R. Stewart on that of the hostel at Chengtu. At the former a thorough course of instruction in the Bible, dogmatics, Christian evidences, homiletics, and Church history, is given to the men. Mr. Stewart reaches not the hostellers only, but also other students who attend his English and Bible classes, while, in addition, he conducts classes in some government schools.[1] The Rev. H. J. Howden has an even wider field. His services are lent to the West China Religious Tract Society, which has its head-quarters at Chungking—not to be confused with Chungkiang, the C.M.S. station. Within the three provinces, Szechwan, Kweichow, and Yunnan, which constitute the sphere of its operations, the Tract Society circulates about 1,200,000 copies of Christian tracts, books, pamphlets, etc.

Literary work

Bishop Cassels and the Rev. W. L. L. Knipe were engaged on the revision of the Chinese Prayer Book; and the Rev. W. Munn compiled a chronological analysis of the divided monarchy of Israel and Judah, with some contemporary Chinese dates.

Special meetings conducted by a Chinese clergyman

Prominent among the events of 1914 in the Mission were the special meetings conducted at the various stations by the Rev. Ku Ho-Lin, the senior Chinese clergyman in the diocese. In almost every case they were well attended, and in some instances remarkably so. At Anhsien, for example, a covered courtyard, which held 700 persons was well filled at every meeting. The mandarin and his staff were present at one gathering for the gentry and scholars, also the various city officials, and all the leading gentry; another meeting, for women, was attended by nearly every lady in the city, including the mandarin's wife, and she and several others remained for the evening meeting. The ordinary evangelistic work is carried on in many different ways and with apparently increasing facility, farmers and students being particularly accessible. Several of the missionaries refer to the friendliness of the people, and especially—it sounds strange to those who remember the early history of mission work in China—of the gentry and literati. Thus, at Shihchuan, where the Rev. J. A. Hickman met with bitter and systematic opposition on beginning work in 1895, the mandarin is now a constant visitor at the mission house, and Mr. Hickman is admitted as a friend to the houses of people in all classes of society. Lantern services are often held at Tehyang, and attract so many people that, though between 300 and 400 can be accommodated in the hall, numbers have to be turned away since there is not even standing room for them; in that district a British and Foreign Bible Society's colporteur sold 3700 gospels during the year. Another method of work is receiving visitors, as at Mienchuh, where half a dozen of the yamen ladies,[1] go to the mission house week by week, and after tea study the Gospels. Again, in one part of Mienchow, meetings are held in a mission hall for country women attending the markets, with about thirty at each gathering.

Receiving visitors

But the efforts of the missionaries are by no means confined to the stations at which they reside. There are a number of out-stations, as they are termed, though many do not strictly come within that category, seeing that they have no resident agent. Thus, in the Mienchuh district, there are said to be four out-stations, but at none of them is there an evangelist or teacher. Some idea of the degree in which the work of the Mission has expanded may be gained by taking the case of one station, Anhsien, which has five "out-stations." The first, Siushuiho, is a large town fifteen miles south of Anhsien, where is a growing congregation under the charge of a capable evangelist. Ten men and one woman, the firstfruits of the work, were baptized in 1914, and eight men and four women were admitted to the catechumenate. The two schools, with sixty-three boys and twenty-three girls respectively, have a high reputation, and that, apparently, not only in mission circles, for the Rev. D. A. Callum says that a boy who had been carried off by brigands was returned by them after a few days' detention with an apology to the effect that they had not known he was a "gospel hall schoolboy."[1] The services at Siushuiho are attended by many leading townsmen, who profess faith in the Saviour. The second "out-station" is Hopachang, another large town, twenty-five miles south of Anhsien. The men among the Christians, who number about one hundred, are responsible for the services and meetings, and for the oversight of the school in which are thirty-six boys. Two women and a schoolboy were baptized in 1914; five men and six women were received as catechumens; and Miss A. Wied says that when she visits the town she is hardly allowed time for meals, as the women are keen to learn, and arrive in relays to be taught. At Luikuping, a small town to the north of the main station, a Christian farmer conducts the services and gives up part of every market day to preaching and selling Christian books. His youngest son and one other person were baptized, and two people were admitted to the catechumenate. This is a Mohammedan centre and has been slow in its response to the Gospel. Five miles farther north is Tsaohaikiai, where the mission premises were burnt down by the Boxers in 1909. There has been some lukewarmness within the Church and opposition from outside, but two women were baptized during the year and others were under preparation for baptism. At Hwakiaitsi, twelve miles east of Anhsien, there was a movement towards Christianity some years ago, but time proved that it had not been inspired by any desire for salvation from sin, but rather by the current belief that Christians were helped by the foreigners in their law suits. Only a few adherents now remain, and they are responsible for the conduct of their own services on most Sundays. A woman belonging to one of the chief families in the town was received as a catechumen in 1914.

An example of expansion

Much of the time of the missionaries is occupied by visits to the out-stations, but they also go to places where no regular work has yet been established. A number of idol festivals were attended, at which many booklets and tracts were sold, the priests being ready to lend the missionaries tables and forms for a few cash or even without payment; and Mr. W. R. Cannell and a Chinese catechist made several itinerations from Chungpa, and again visited Songpan.[1] In the course of their journey they held a lantern service at each stopping place, at not a few of which the people had never before heard the Gospel.

Visit to Songpan

First converts at Hanchow

Some of the results of this varied work have already been spoken of. Among others may be mentioned the baptism of the first converts, three men and two women, at Hanchow; while most of the other stations, with the exception of Lungan, where the work is still in the pioneer stage, report some admissions into the visible Church. At Pehmiaodz, an out-station of Chungpa, a man, Mr. Ho, was baptized, who ten years or so ago was an active opponent of the missionaries. He has now become a valued helper, selling tracts and Scripture portions on market days, and visiting neighbouring towns for the same purpose, besides assisting the school teacher at the Sunday services. He needs, it is said, more discretion, for he sometimes offends people by his blunt sayings. Among those who became "hearers" or were admitted to the catechumenate was an old gentleman, who sought help in breaking off the opium habit. His sufferings at times were great, and then he would go and, kneeling down beside his bed, seek the help of his newly found Saviour.

A former opponent becomes a valued worker

Educational work

The only secondary schools in the Mission are the Boarding Schools, for boys and girls respectively, at Mienchow. New buildings, with accommodation for fifty boarders, were erected for the former. Two lads submitted themselves for the examination of the Board of Education at Chengtu, and one of them gained the first place in Scripture, and consequently the Hoffman prize. The prize has only twice been awarded, and on each occasion was won by a boy from the Mienchow school. Several of the lads applied for admission to the catechumenate, as did some of the pupils at the girls' boarding school, which has about fifty names on its roll. Two girls belonging to one of the leading families in the city were admitted as day scholars. Four former pupils are now teachers in the school, and during part of 1914 a normal class was held for their benefit.

Pupils seek to become catechumens

Medical work

A new out-patient department of the hospital at Mienchuh was formally opened at the beginning of the year under review in the presence of the mandarin, the county officials, and representatives of the eight wards of the city. The mandarin and city elders took advantage of the opportunity to present the hospital with a laudatory inscription, which the Viceroy of the province had commanded them to give in recognition of the help rendered by the missionaries during the troubles of 1913.[2] A large increase took place in the number of in-patients and of visits of out-patients.

A laudatory inscription

[1] Cf. Report, 1913–14, p. 198. [2] Ib., p. 197.

One of those who received treatment was a member of a secret society, who had given the mandarin information as to the whereabouts of its head-quarters. Some of the members were arrested, and others in revenge seized the informer, dug out his right eye, and cut to the bone all the muscles of his left leg. It appears that it is a common form of oath in secret societies in China to swear by the right eye and the left foot. Extensive evangelistic work is carried on among the patients, who purchase between 400 and 500 Scripture portions every month. Two former patients were accepted for baptism, and some women vegetarians broke their fast.[1] Dispensary work is carried on at many of the stations, and at some it is on quite a considerable scale.

Pastoral work

The annual summer school, primarily for Bible women, but to which other Christian women are also admitted, was held at Anhsien for nine days; and a regular course of instruction was given for a few months to eight women in a station class at Mienchow. The state of the Church at Anhsien is not altogether satisfactory, for some of the church members rarely attend any services, and others have actually reverted to idolatry; and there was some cause for anxiety concerning one or two of the out-stations in the Mienchuh district. But a good report is given concerning many of the converts, who are active in their endeavours to spread the knowledge of the Saviour. The Bible woman at Chungkiang, for example, who is not very strong, when urged to rest after five hours' consecutive work among crowds of women, only replied, "How can I go and rest when there are so many sisters here willing to listen to the Gospel?" At Sintu, again, as there was no missionary available to take the place of the Rev. E. A. Hamilton when he left on furlough, the organization of the work was put in the hands of a station committee formed from among the Chinese Christians—quite a new development in Western China. This has been rendered possible by the good work of Mr. Siao, the catechist, who has been the means of leading a number of his relatives to Christ.

"How can I go and rest?"

JAPAN

Japan consists of four principal islands, namely, Honshiu (mainland), Kiu-Shiu, Shikoku, and Hokkaido (Yezo), besides a number of smaller islands. The Japanese Empire includes also Formosa, the Pescadores, and Korea. Japan proper covers an area of 147,000 square miles, and has a population of about 50,000,000. Roman Catholic missionaries reached the country in 1549, but engaging in political intrigues they were expelled, and in 1624 Christianity was prohibited on pain of death. For 230 years Japan was practically closed to the outer world, but in 1853 it began to open to American and European influences, and since that time the country has made extraordinary progress in the adoption of Western civilization. Still more recent is the toleration now fully accorded to Christian effort. In 1889 a new political constitution, formed somewhat on the lines of that of our own land, was promulgated. At the first general election under this constitution, held in 1890, fourteen Christians were elected to seats in the House of Representatives; and a Christian was subsequently appointed Speaker. In 1899 new treaties came into operation by which the country was thrown completely open to foreigners. Lastly, in 1912, the government policy which gave exclusive patronage to Shintoism, the official religion of the country (Buddhism, the popular religion, had been disestablished in 1884), was changed, and Christianity was recognized and its aid sought.

American missionaries arrived in 1859, but for several years they could do scarcely any direct evangelistic work. The first British missionary, the Rev. G. Ensor of the C.M.S., reached Japan in 1869. According to the "Christian Movement in Japan, 1914," the Protestant missionaries in Japan now number 624 (men 222, wives 182, and single women 220) connected with twenty-eight societies or boards. There are 728 Japanese ordained men, and 102,790 adherents of Protestant Missions. The converts connected with the C.M.S., S.P.G., Canadian Church, and Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America unite to form the Nippon Sei Kokwai, which in 1913 had 18,826 adherents.

One great difficulty with which Christian missionary effort in Japan is confronted is indicated by a fact mentioned by the Rev. M. O. M. Duke. A naval officer one day showed him his "religious belief book," which consisted of some pages which he himself had bound together. On one page was written in Japanese the two words "Emperor" and "God," the former placed above the latter; and the officer told Mr. Duke that at one time he believed that the Emperor should be put above God. It is this opinion as to the relative positions of God and of the Emperor which is at the bottom of much of the dislike felt for Christianity by the Japanese; they regard it as incompatible with loyalty. It may therefore mean much to Christian missions that in November, 1914, the Emperor, after using the Momoyama School of the C.M.S. as a pavilion during the Osaka army manœuvres, transmitted to the school the sum of 100 yen as an acknowledgment of the hospitality extended to him, and that he has made a donation of 100,000 yen towards the foundation of St. Luke's International Hospital at Tokyo, promoted by the American Episcopal Mission; for while by so doing he has not, of course, expressed any approval of the tenets of Christianity, his action would be inconceivable if he regarded it as inimical to himself.[1] The attitude of the Government towards Christianity is also favourable, and these external aids seem to afford good hope for the future. There are other cheering signs. The statistics of Protestant Missions for 1913 reveal a remarkable increase in the number of adult baptisms and communicants [2]; the reports of the three Bible societies working in Japan show that 374,000 copies of the Scriptures were circulated in that country during the year 1912–13, of which 220,000 were sold by colporteurs [3]; and the united evangelistic campaign, already referred to in the chapter on "The World," and dealt with more fully in the two chapters which follow the present one, may be expected in answer to prayer to produce important and far-reaching results. Moreover the war appears likely to check in some degree that leaning to German philosophy which for a time has been conspicuous in Japan; at all events it has served to prevent Professor Eucken from paying his contemplated visit to the country. It may be, too, that it will cause the Japanese to draw a distinction between real and nominal Christianity, and to cease to regard all the foreign sailors, merchants, and travellers who visit their country, and many of whom show little trace of the Spirit of Christ, as necessarily Christians.[4]

Synod of the Nippon Sei Kokwai

The eleventh general synod of the Nippon Sei Kokwai was held in Kyoto in April, 1914. A revised Prayer Book was agreed upon, which includes a Collect, Epistle, and Gospel for the Festival of the Transfiguration, and contains a few other changes from that previously in use. On the question whether the Nippon Sei Kokwai should join with other Protestant societies in the united evangelistic campaign, the opposition of a minority was very pronounced, and no agreement could be reached; but eventually a motion was passed, though not unanimously, to collect a sum of £150 from voluntary subscribers and give it as a subscription from the Nippon Sei Kokwai to the expenses of the movement. The question of joining the Federation of the Japan Evangelical Churches was referred to a committee consisting of the seven bishops and six Japanese priests, who are to present their report to the next triennial general synod in 1917.

CENTRAL JAPAN MISSION

PAST HISTORY

The Rev. G. Ensor, the first C.M.S. missionary to the Japanese, landed at Nagasaki, in Kiu-Shiu, in 1869, and in 1873 the Mission was extended to HONSHIU, the Main Island, and Osaka was occupied. Tokyo received a resident missionary in 1874; Matsuye, 1888; Fukuyama, 1891; Hiroshima, 1892; Hamada, 1893; Yonago, 1902; and Kure, 1907. In SHIKOKU, Tokushima was occupied in 1888.

Arrangements were made by Archbishop Tait for the establishment of an English bishopric in Japan, and his successor, Archbishop Benson, nominated the Rev. A. W. Poole, C.M.S. missionary in South India, to be the first bishop. He was consecrated on 18 October, 1883. On his death in July, 1885, he was succeeded by Bishop Edward Bickersteth. In 1893 the Committee undertook, on the invitation of Bishop Bickersteth, to support two new bishops for the southern and northern islands respectively. In 1894 Bishop Bickersteth agreed with Bishop McKim, of the American Episcopal Church, upon a division of the Main Island into the dioceses of North and South Tokyo, Kyoto, and Osaka; North Tokyo and Kyoto being assigned to the American Church. Dr. Boutflower now presides over the diocese of South Tokyo, and Dr. Foss over that of Osaka. A new diocese, Mid Japan, was formed out of South Tokyo in 1912, for which Dr. Hamilton of the Canadian Church, a former C.M.S. missionary, was consecrated bishop.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The chief stations on the Main Island are Osaka, the centre of trade in southern and western Japan; Fukuyama, to the west of Osaka; Kure, a naval port, and Hiroshima, on the Inland Sea; Hamada, the chief town of the western province of Iwami; and Matsuye and Yonago to the north-east of Hamada. Tokushima is on the island of Shikoku. All these are in the diocese of Osaka. In the diocese of South Tokyo, Tokyo, the largest city in the empire and the seat of the Emperor's Government, is occupied.

The educational institutions include the Momoyama School for boys, and the Bishop Poole Memorial School for girls, at Osaka; and a Bible women's training home at Ashiya.

Evangelistic work throughout Japan is prosecuted largely by means of English and other classes. Public meetings of an evangelistic character are regularly held at the Whidborne Hall, Tokyo, the Warren Memorial Hall, Osaka, and at all the stations and out-stations; special services are frequently conducted in, or in connexion with, the various churches; and preaching tours are made in the country districts as opportunity offers.

The staff engaged in the Mission consists of 10 European and 15 Japanese clergymen, 1 layman, 10 missionaries' wives and 23 other women missionaries. The Japanese Christian lay teachers and evangelists number 68.

Three years' evangelistic campaign

A GOOD deal of co-operation between the various missions working in the country took place in Japan in 1914. First and foremost there was the united three years' evangelistic campaign, which was mentioned in last year's Report [1] as being contemplated and was inaugurated on 1 March, 1914, by prayer meetings, most of them union gatherings, in various parts, while on the three following days preparatory meetings were held at Tokyo. The main object of the effort is to "bring Christianity before the people as a living vital religion, with power to lift men up out of sin and to plant their feet upon the Rock," but it has also the subsidiary purpose of showing the real unity of Christians, concerning which the non-Christian Japanese are sometimes, not unnaturally, a little sceptical as they observe the independent evangelistic efforts of the several Churches. The campaign is organized by a committee of twenty-two members, who urge that at each church the whole three years should be regarded as a time to be devoted to special and extra evangelistic work. A brief and more intensive "mission" is to be held in each town and district, and it was decided to begin this part of the work in the interior and smaller towns and districts. A series of meetings was held at Hiroshima, Kure, and Fukuyama in the autumn, and resulted in about forty persons giving in their names to the C.M.S. workers as inquirers, while others applied for instruction to the representatives of other societies. The main effort in Tokyo was to be made in 1915, but in the autumn of 1914 special services were held on a Saturday and a Sunday in each of the one hundred churches and mission halls in the city.[1]

Organization of the campaign

The missions in Central Japan unite in other work besides the three years' campaign. A preaching place is maintained at Hiroshima, where each mission is responsible for the service on one evening a week, while once a month the Churches in that town join in a meeting for the World's Women's Christian Temperance Association. Again, the missions at Tokyo combined in erecting a hall for evangelistic meetings during an industrial exhibition which took place in the summer of 1914, and so organized their forces that during the whole of the four months that it was open, meetings were held continuously from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Arrangements have also been made by which the Church Missionary Society's divinity students will attend the lectures at the Anglican Theological College at Tokyo, of which the Rev. S. Heaslett has been appointed one of the professors. The course at the college lasts for three years, the New Testament being the most prominent subject in the first year, the Old Testament in the second; and doctrinal teaching in the last.

Turning to the matters specifically connected with C.M.S work, the death has to be recorded of Miss A. P. Carr, which took place at Liverpool on 25 June, 1914. She worked at Tokyo from 1896 until 1901, when she resigned for medical reasons. The Committee have accepted the resignation of Miss A. M. Tapson after twenty-six years' service in Japan.

Pastoral work

All the converts connected with the C.M.S., the S.P.G., the Canadian Church, and the American Protestant Episcopal Church are united in the Nippon Sei Kokwai, but the degree of independence of the societies varies in proportion to the measure of self-support which has been attained. This involves some difficulties. For example, at Osaka, where many church members have moved into the suburbs, they now live so far away from the churches with which they have been connected that it is not easy for them to attend services, even though they make use of the tramways, a course which is open to objection on account of involving Sunday travelling. The natural thing would be for them to join Churches nearer their new homes, but it means great self-sacrifice on the part of their old Church to pass them on to another, because the loss of any of its members makes it harder to raise the funds required for self-support. While the pastoral work belongs essentially to the Nippon Sei Kokwai, of which the missionaries themselves are members, there are many cases in which the duty of shepherding the Christians is entrusted to C.M.S. catechists, supervised by European missionaries, and the women missionaries of the C.M.S. often work in close association with the pastors and minister to their Japanese sisters. It is a happy thing that they are able to speak well of the converts. Those in one part of Tokyo are said to be noted for their simple, child-like faith; in another congregation in that city a "marked improvement" took place during the latter half of 1914; at Hamada the little group of Christians are "going faithfully forward"; and at Matsuye, during the absence of the Rev. O. H. Knight through ill-health, the Japanese Christians carried on the work at the preaching room, which has since been definitely and formally committed to the pastor and his flock. Several individual cases of good work are mentioned. The death-bed testimony of a young woman at Tokyo was the means of her brother's conversion, and led her nurse also to become an inquirer; and a lady at Osaka, bearing a letter of introduction to Miss E. B. Boulton from a Kiu-Shiu missionary, spent a whole afternoon (owing to a wrong address having been given) looking for the former's house, and evinced great anxiety for teaching, not for herself only but for her servants as well. At Hiroshima, however, there is much lukewarmness among the converts, and at Osaka the younger Christians are apt to conform to the general custom of regarding Sunday as a day for visits, picnics, etc.

Difficulties about self-support

Agents for all three C.M.S. Missions in Japan were trained in 1914 at three different institutions. Two of them, the divinity school at Osaka, where men were prepared for the ministry or for work as catechists, and the Bible Women's Training Institution at Ashiya, were in Central Japan, and the third, a Bible school at Hakata, for training evangelists, in Kiu-Shiu. Four men completed their course at the Osaka Divinity School in the spring, and took up work either in Kiu-Shiu or Hokkaido, but one of them resigned shortly afterwards. In the autumn term sixteen men, all of them middle school graduates, were reading at Osaka. In March, 1915, the students were transferred to Tokyo, so that they might attend the lectures at the Anglican theological college.

Training institutions

The two secondary schools of the Society, both of them at Osaka, also serve all its Missions. There are more than 600 boys on the roll of the Momoyama School; all the teachers, with the exception of one who is an inquirer, are Christians, and the more earnest among them have been formed into an evangelistic council which has done good work. Ten of the pupils and one old boy were baptized in 1914, but there were not many earnest catechumens when the year closed. The best spiritual work is done among the boarders, who number forty-five. A magazine, published twice a year, is a means of keeping the missionaries in touch with most of the old boys, from some of whom encouraging letters are received from time to time. Two of the teachers at the Bishop Poole Memorial School were baptized, and a third became an inquirer. Some special services, conducted in the school by the Rev. B. F. Barclay Buxton and a Japanese evangelist, proved helpful to many of the girls. Some of them teach in Sunday schools, assist in work in a factory, support a child in a Christian orphanage, and raise funds for other charitable objects. Good news was forthcoming from many former pupils, but Miss K. A. S. Tristram feels that results of the work of the school should be greater. Difficulties in connexion with the observance of Sunday and with marriage cause a lot of leakage from among those who once ran well. The school has applied for but as yet has failed to obtain from the Government two privileges: one is the admission of its pupils to the entrance examination of the Nara higher normal school, and the other is their admission, on the same terms as girls from government high schools, to the examinations for primary school teachers' certificates. The policy of the Government, it is said, is as far as possible to keep Christians out of the teaching profession. The C.M.S. has a Kindergarten at Yonago, which is doing good work.

Failure to obtain privileges from the Government

The position as concerns evangelistic work appears to vary in different parts of the country. At Osaka and Tokushima much indifference prevails, though the student class at Osaka are keen on instruction about Christianity, and there are many openings among the industrial and commercial classes which a few years ago could hardly be reached at all. Miss L. L. Shaw, of the

Evangelistic work

Missionary Society of the Church of Canada, whose services are lent to the Bishop Poole School, says :—

Openings among commercial men

In many of the big banks, the factories, the police, the railways, the post office, weekly meetings for Christian instruction would not only be allowed but welcomed. Some, at least, of the great employers of industry are beginning to see that only the religion of Christ can give their men the moral backbone that is so much needed, and the result is that there are openings for teaching the Gospel on all sides far more than, with our limited numbers of workers, can be taken advantage of.

Christianity despised in country districts

Again, in the country districts around Matsuye, Christianity is still despised and misunderstood; a Christian schoolmaster or official finds it almost impossible to retain his place, and a private individual has a good deal of persecution to endure. In that region the action of a section of the population of the United States in the Californian question as to the admission of Japanese immigrants has undoubtedly been injurious to the cause of true religion. On the other hand, there are great opportunities at Hiroshima, where visits are paid fortnightly to the military hospital, and translations of the English soldiers' prayer are gladly accepted by the men; and both there and at Tokushima houses are open on every side to the workers. Good use is made in the Mission of the lantern, which attracts large audiences within sound of the Gospel; evangelistic meetings are held regularly at the Whidborne Hall, Tokyo, where the telephone has lately been installed and is of great service in connexion with following up inquirers, and at other mission halls; and classes are conducted for all grades and sections of society—for hospital nurses, women students at a medical school, girls attending high schools, servants, and so on. Many English classes are held, the members of one at Tokushima including four masters at a middle school, one at a commercial school, and several junior army officers. Some missionaries also take English classes in government schools, and thus gain opportunities for teaching Christianity indirectly. These classes are fruitful in converts. Three members of a class for young men were baptized in 1914, two of them afterwards entering the divinity school; from another class two girl students at a medical school were baptized; and from a third two other young men; while several persons became catechumens, and others seemed likely to take that step. Other converts of the year (not all won through English classes) were four ladies at one station; two officials and their wives; and a hospital nurse, who chose the name of Mary Magdalene, and particularly asked to have it in full, because, she said, Mary was a woman out of whom the Lord Jesus cast seven devils, and there had been as many or more in her. When this woman was asked whether she did not find it trying to be rung for so often in hospital when seeking to obtain a little much-needed rest, she replied, "No; when the bell goes, I say, 'There, Jesus is calling; He wants me.'" Among the inquirers was a man who accidentally, as it seemed, entered a preaching place, and afterwards, struck by what he had heard, put himself under instruction, persuaded his wife to do the same, and was the means also of leading another couple to become inquirers. At another place a captain stood up after some special meetings to confess his faith in Christ, and a lieutenant in the same regiment, on another occasion, spoke publicly of the great spiritual help he had received. In a third town the English master in a middle school, who has a Christian wife, was won; and in a fourth a petty naval officer and his wife, overcome with grief at the loss of three of their children, visited the missionaries for comfort and teaching, and accepted the message of hope which they heard from them. There are, however, many obstacles confronting the workers. One is the lack of mission agents, as in the Hamada Province, where in 1914 there was only one foreign missionary, and she a woman. Another is the attitude taken up by the husbands of many inquirers; without actually opposing their wives being taught, they do not make it easy for them to get out, while the wives have duties to perform before the ancestral tablets, which are obligatory upon them until they are released by their husbands. The instability of the people, too, militates against the rapid progress of Christianity in the land; there are "many beginnings," one missionary says, "but apparently few definite results." But though it is a case of "here a little and there a little," yet on the whole there is advance, and, to quote Mr. Heaslett, "certainly a victorious spirit moves among" the missionaries.

Inquirers

Opposition of husbands

"Many beginnings," but few definite results

There is one important branch of evangelistic work which has not yet been mentioned—namely, that carried on among children by means of Sunday schools and meetings. They are held at practically all the stations in the Mission, generally with good attendances. At one place an elder girl in the Sunday school was baptized, and showed much earnestness in seeking to win her relatives; and at another place a former pupil was baptized on her death-bed. Through the children, moreover, their relatives are often brought under Christian influence. Miss J. C. Gillespy mentions a case:—

Reaching the young

> One little lady came against her will with her husband to see about sending her two little girls to Sunday school, as the father had heard from a friend that Christian influence would help to cure his elder daughter of her violent temper. The lady had long been in weary bondage to the service of many gods, but we had the great joy of leading her to the Saviour and seeing a wonderful change come into her life. Unfortunately, her husband was moved to another town, but she writes brightly and seems to be growing in faith and knowledge.

Work among Chinese students is carried on at Tokyo.[1] There are between 3000 and 5000 of them in Japan, of whom about one hundred are girl students proper, while about 700 more are wives of students, who intermittently take courses in arts, music, etc. These men and women are open to influence in an exceptional degree through being in a foreign land, since they are free from home distractions, while the enlightenment which characterizes the Japanese tends to affect those who reside among them. On the other hand the great laxity of morals which prevails constitutes a danger of the first magnitude to the girls, and makes the provision of hostels for them most desirable. When they first arrive in the country, says Miss D. C. Joynt (who has been transferred from the Chekiang Mission to work among them), they are almost swept off their feet by the incomprehensible freedom between the sexes. They imagine that Japan stands for "progress," and are apt to take every "new custom" that they come across as the model. Unhappily, owing in the main to inability to find a suitable matron, the Society's hostel for these girls had to be closed in the autumn of 1914. One of the girls, a married woman, was confirmed hurriedly in the autumn, as she was obliged to return to her home in Hunan. Mrs. W. H. Elwin wrote in January:—

Peril of Chinese girl students in Japan

A "splendid Christian."

She is a splendid Christian, and from the first has had a firm grip of the truth. She was baptized a year ago without her parents' knowledge. She is a married woman and felt perfectly free to act. She knew, too, that to ask their permission would only be to court refusal. When they heard of it they were most indignant, and wrote strong and even cruel letters to the girl and the brother who was baptized with her. The girl felt that though she had done perfectly right she ought to wait for confirmation till the parents had had an opportunity of judging of her conduct for themselves. This came in the summer when she went home for the holidays. Would that all the students' holidays were as profitable! She succeeded in convincing them of the truth of Christianity and left them inquiring for themselves about the way of life. About two months after her return to Tokyo came a telegram summoning her home to see her mother, who was seriously ill. Within two days her passage was taken, and she came to say good-bye. She had one regret, she said, that she had not been confirmed; was there any way in which it could be managed? The Bishop was consulted over the telephone and he kindly promised to arrange for a special service that evening at St. Hilda's Chapel. All this took a good deal of time, but the girl was quite willing to give up the whole day, though she was starting the next morning for China, to the due preparation for the rite. A Chinese friend from her hostel came with her and with the prayers of a sympathetic congregation of Japanese and English she received the laying on of hands.

A hastily arranged confirmation service

Several girl students were under preparation for baptism, and forty-two of the men received that rite in 1914. Some of the new converts are students at an "Eastern Asiatic School" which has been started by a member of the church committee. In the work among the men the services of Mr. S. R. Tan have been lost through his return to Szechwan, but those of the Rev. H. D. Yü, of Hangchow, have been obtained from the Chekiang Mission.

KIU-SHIU MISSION

PAST HISTORY

When the C.M.S. began work in Japan in 1869, Nagasaki was the scene of its operations. Kumamoto was occupied in 1887; Fukuoka, 1888; Oita and Kagoshima, 1895; Kokura, 1898; Omuta, Saseho, and Moji, 1914; and Kurume 1915.

The diocese of Kiu-Shiu was constituted in 1893, and in the following year the Rev. H. Evington, a C.M.S. missionary of twenty years' experience in Japan, was consecrated. He retired in 1909 and was succeeded by Dr. A. Lea, a missionary of the Canadian C.M.S.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The work is carried on in much the same way as in Central Japan. Saseho, Nagasaki, Omuta, and Kumamoto in the west; Kokura, Moji, and Kurume in the north; Oita in the east; and Kagoshima, in the south of the island, are the stations. The C.M.S. has no educational institutions in Kiu-Shiu.

The staff of the Mission consists, besides Bishop Lea, of 6 European clergymen, 7 Japanese clergymen, 9 wives of missionaries, 7 single women, and 33 Japanese Christian lay agents.

THE report of the work in the diocese of Kiu-Shiu for the year 1914 affirms that "there is a general feeling that while opportunities of preaching the Gospel have been many and much work has been done, the outward results have, on the whole, been few and the amount of apparent progress little." As reasons for this are assigned a lack of workers, especially of women missionaries, which involves not only the overburdening of those who are available, but also the necessity of frequently moving them from place to place according to the exigencies of the Mission; the constant removals of the Christians, as at Saseho, where of the seventy persons, including children, who formed the congregation at the beginning of the year, forty had left the town by its close; the distances which have to be covered in order to visit the scattered converts and inquirers; the opposition of their relatives; and the indifference of the masses. Another factor which militates against progress is said to be the ideal which prevails in the Japanese Church, and is widely different from that entertained by the foreign missionaries. On this point the report says:—

The ideal of many Japanese Christians

> The difference may be expressed in two words, "extensive" and "intensive." The extensive ideal looks to the evangelization of the whole nation and tends towards expansion and decentralization. The aim is to create as many independent congregations as possible to be centres of life and light and aggressive Christian effort in the midst of the great masses of heathenism. It is the ideal of the foreign missionary. On the other hand, the Japanese Church has not yet learnt to think of the evangelization of the whole country as practical politics. An infant organization which is still struggling for existence is naturally inclined to fail in breadth of vision and power of foresight. The man who lives from hand to mouth finds it hard to think imperially, and the Church whose attention is absorbed by problems of self-support fails to appreciate the extensive ideal. Its great ambition is to make the existing congregations strong, and it wants to see all the machinery and resources of the Church applied to that one purpose, even at the cost of neglecting the work of evangelization. It differs from the missionary society in desiring to see, not many congregations in every province growing upon parallel lines, as it were, and advancing until the country is covered with a network of Churches, but, looking at the one existing, partly self-supporting congregation, in desiring that all Christians in the province should be affiliated to it and pay their subscriptions to its funds, even when there is no possibility of that Church being able to minister to their spiritual needs or undertake the evangelization of the districts in which they live. And the idea of founding any other congregation in the province until that one Church is fully self-supporting and independent, is regarded as an infringement of its rights and a thing to be prevented if possible. This is the intensive ideal. It does not prevail throughout the whole Church, nor is it often stated so plainly as above, but it colours the thoughts and aspirations of many of the Japanese clergymen and laymen.

The general report, however, and the annual letters of the missionaries are able to mention many facts and incidents which are full of promise, especially in connexion with the character and efforts of the Japanese Christians. The Kagoshima Christians unanimously resolved in 1914 to defray one-third of their pastor's salary, and the senior catechist was ordained deacon and licensed to the Church. Some of the people are developing a love for souls, and one widow, young in the faith, is spoken of, who, by dint of very hard work to make her independent of her relatives, contrives to keep God's Day holy; she strives to the utmost of her power to win others for Christ, and her life has made a deep impression upon many of her relatives and friends. From several of the other stations, Nogata being an exception, come reports of an improvement in the Christians, particularly as concerns their efforts to win others, and a number of individual cases are quoted in which earnestness and piety were shown. Thus, the Rev. C. O. Pickard-Cambridge writes as follows about some of the converts in the Saseho district:—

A widow's consistent life

The "fruits of the Spirit"

A recently baptized Christian declared that he could no longer countenance the dishonest practices and drinking habits of the insurance company in which he was employed, and resigned his position to take up the work of Bible selling under the British and Foreign Bible Society. Again, the loving patience and forbearance of a Christian wife brought shame to the heart of a heathen husband who, in a drunken frenzy, had struck and maimed her. Once again, a Christian woman of good position but not well off, by the sale of vegetables and other small articles saved money of about £1 in value which she presented to the Church as a thankoffering to God for spiritual mercies received. And once more, the keen, bright faith of a young man of about 20 saved the Church from the effects of a quarrel between some of the members which threatened serious consequences. These are a few of the "fruits of the Spirit" which has God given us to witness.

The influence of a convert at Moji, in the Kokura district, led two women to apply for admission to the catechumenate; and at another station a student at the normal school gave up his positions as captain of the school baseball and tennis teams because his playing on Sunday interfered with the work of tract distribution which he had taken up. He is the only Christian among more than 400 students, and has to endure a good deal at the hands of the master and his fellow students because of his faith.

Evangelistic work

At the beginning of 1914, Saseho, in the extreme west of the island, a strongly fortified naval port with a population of about 80,000, where the Rev. F. W. Rowlands, a former C.M.S. missionary, had resided as an independent worker for five years, was occupied in place of Hakata, where Mr. Rowlands proceeded to take up his abode; while Oita, on the east coast, after a lapse of eight years again received a resident missionary. Another development was the substitution of Omuta, a town inhabited largely by miners, instead of Kumamoto, as the residence of the Rev. S. Painter, the superintending missionary in that district, Kumamoto being left to the Rev. R. Matsuoka. Moreover, at the end of February, regular work was resumed at Kagoshima, after being suspended for nearly two months by the volcanic eruption on the island of Sakurashima.[1] Advantage was taken by the C.M.S. workers, in conjunction with those of three other societies, of the opportunities for reaching the refugees from the island, few of whom had heard the Gospel before. Both in the town of Kagoshima and in the district, which contains a population of 1,300,000, and includes the islands of Tanegashima and Yakushima, forty miles to the south, evangelistic meetings were well attended in the summer; and concerning the Mission in general, it is said that there was a greater readiness than before to listen to the Gospel and less reluctance to be seen at Christian meetings. Some of the annual letters, however, are couched in a rather minor key. At Nagasaki, according to one missionary, the people are bigoted and the city wholly given to idolatry; and at Nogata few houses are open to the workers, and little advance is discernible as the result of eight years' effort. Again, the meetings held in the town of Kokura in connexion with the Three Years' United Evangelistic Campaign failed to procure any new openings for the women missionaries, although many women attended the gatherings. Possibly the reason for this is expressed in the following extract from one of the annual letters:—

Omuta occupied

Less reluctance to be seen at Christian meetings

Need of a revival among the workers

I have been feeling lately the apparent lack of eagerness on the part of Japanese fellow-workers (in our own and other bodies) to preach Christ and to plead with souls to accept Him as their Lord and Saviour which, seems to show that He is hardly the joy and His glory the object of their lives. This was, alas! specially seen in some united preachings in connexion with a Three Years' Campaign. Some of the preachers were men of eminence in Japanese

[1] Report, 1913–14, p. 201.

Christian circles; but there was almost a total absence of anything like upholding Christ. The idea seemed to be to give moral lectures and leave the preaching of Christ to the several Churches afterwards. Till this changes, the results in Japan will be disappointing, and not commensurate with the power and promises of God or the constraining love of Christ. This should compel us to pray more for a revival among the workers and Christians.

But in this connexion, as with the pastoral work, there is something to be said on the other side. Even at Nogata two men were baptized; and four men were received into the visible Church at Nagasaki, who were won through the work at the central preaching place, besides two others at an out-station. Converts are reported also from most of the other mission centres. At one place two clerks were baptized and the wife of one of them, the fruit of the efforts of a high postal official; and at another several men holding prominent positions were numbered among the inquirers.[1]

Sunday schools

The Sunday schools in Kiu-Shiu connected directly with the C.M.S. or with the Japanese Church number thirty-five, and are attended by 1916 children. Here and there some opposition to this branch of the work was shown by government teachers, but it was not so marked as in some previous years,[2] and in one case the master of a government school was led by a visit from Bishop Lea, not only to give up his antagonism, but when a missionary was next in the town to invite him to his school and, leaving a sick bed for the purpose, to urge the children to attend a meeting which was to be held in the evening. At a place on the east coast the head master of a district technical school himself started a Sunday school with thirteen children on the sea shore, and carried it on with such success that at the anniversary more than eighty were present. In some cases houses were opened to the visits of missionaries by the children, many of whom show in their lives that they are doers as well as hearers of the Word.[3]

HOKKAIDO MISSION

PAST HISTORY

For four years the work of the C.M.S. in Japan was confined to Nagasaki, and it was not until 1874 that the northern island received a missionary by the occupation of Hakodate. Kushiro was occupied in 1889; Sapporo, 1892; Otaru, 1897; Muroran, 1907; Asahigawa, 1909; and Usu, 1911.

The Rev. P. K. Fyson, who had worked in Japan under the C.M.S. for twenty-two years, was consecrated Bishop in Hokkaido in 1896. He retired in 1908 and was succeeded in 1909 by the Rev. W. Andrews, a former missionary of the Society.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

Hakodate, Sapporo, Otaru, Asahigawa, and Kushiro are the chief stations, the last named in the east of the island. There is a dispensary for Ainu at Asahigawa.

The staff engaged in the Mission consists of Bishop Andrews, 2 other European and 10 Japanese clergymen, 3 missionaries' wives, and 7 other women missionaries. The Christian Japanese and Ainu lay agents number 22.

Death of Dr. W. W. Colborne

A FORMER worker in the Mission, Dr. W. W. Colborne, passed away at Hojo, in Japan, on 20 February, 1915. An M.D. of London University, he practised for a time at Cape Town, and in 1890, after a term at Islington College, he sailed for the South China Mission, where he engaged in itinerating medical work. Failure of health obliged him to come home in 1896, but in the following year he sailed again, this time, however, for Hokkaido. He carried on a remarkable work at Hakodate as an honorary missionary until the end of 1908, when ill-health again drove him home. He retired in 1909, but a little later returned to Japan, taking up his residence at Hojo, where he laboured among consumptives with much success, both spiritual and medical.

Evangelistic work

A great part of the work in Hokkaido is under the Nippon Sei Kokwai, but it is aided by a grant from the C.M.S., and in some of the districts the Society's missionaries labour side by side with the representatives of the Japanese Church. Thus, the Rev. D. Marshall Lang shares in the work in the Hakodate district, and superintends that in the Otaru district, Miss G. S. Stevenson helping in the latter; while several missionaries reside at Sapporo, where, as in the districts mentioned, the work is regarded as that of the Nippon Sei Kokwai. The Sapporo district, however, as distinguished from the city, is still a C.M.S. sphere. The missionaries in that region had a good deal of relief work early in 1914 in consequence of the famine which prevailed in the summer and autumn of the previous year. Full advantage was taken of the opportunities to preach to those who desired help, and some fifty persons were won for Christ and baptized. In this district, which includes Muroran, Usu, and Piratori, there are many Ainu, the aborigines of Japan. They are a "disappearing race," and work among them, as among the Japanese, is difficult because of their bigotry.

Converts through famine relief work

Ainu baptisms

Four persons, however, were baptized at Muroran, and eight adults at Usu. In Sapporo itself there was much disappointment in connexion with the efforts to win the women and girls, many inquirers who had been under instruction for some time showing no sign of coming to a decision. Most of the Sunday schools in the Mission are flourishing.

Pastoral work

On her return to Otaru, whither she was re-transferred in the summer of 1914 after an absence of three years, Miss Stevenson realized with deep thankfulness that a great improvement had taken place in the Christians. Instead of being occupied mainly with worldly aims and ambitions, some of them manifested an earnest desire for the spiritual well-being of the Church. But in general the converts appear to lack a sense of responsibility for doing personal work, and few are offering to devote their lives to the effort to win others for Christ. Thus has arisen a scarcity of paid Japanese agents, which materially affects the Mission. Some progress towards self-support is recorded, but the poverty of most of the Christians, accentuated now through the war, makes the ideal very difficult of attainment. The pastoral oversight of the Ainu Christians is hindered by their being scattered far and wide, and living in many cases at a considerable distance from Sapporo; and this is the more to be regretted because most of them can neither read nor write, and consequently are entirely dependent on oral teaching.

Lack of Japanese agents

NORTH-WEST CANADA MISSIONS

PAST HISTORY

The Society's work in North-West Canada is among the remnants of the Red Indian tribes scattered over the vast country formerly known as the Hudson Bay Territory, but now included in the Dominion of Canada. In 1822 the Rev. John West arrived at a trading settlement on the Red River, a little south of Lake Winnipeg, and began to gather the Indians round him. Now the Red River District is the flourishing colonial province of Manitoba, and a large part of the Society's work has developed into the settled ministrations of the Church in the Colony. One of the Society's churches has become the cathedral of the diocese of Rupert's Land, which was founded in 1849. That diocese was divided in 1872 into four parts, the three new dioceses being those of Moosonee, Athabasca, and Saskatchewan. In 1875 these dioceses were constituted an ecclesiastical province with the Bishop of Rupert's Land as the Metropolitan. In 1884 the provincial synod divided the diocese of Athabasca, forming the new diocese of Mackenzie River, and at the same time the diocese of Qu'Appelle was formed out of Rupert's Land and Saskatchewan. In 1887 the diocese of Calgary was formed out of Saskatchewan; in 1890 Selkirk (now known as Yukon), on the west of the Rocky Mountains, out of Mackenzie River; and in 1902 Keewatin out of Rupert's Land and Moosonee. Two other new dioceses, Edmonton and Brandon, were formed in 1913. The present occupant of the see of Rupert's Land is Archbishop Matheson (1905); of Moosonee, Dr. Anderson (1909); of Keewatin, Dr. Lofthouse (1902); of Saskatchewan, Dr. Newnham (translated from Moosonee, 1903); of Qu'Appelle, Dr. Harding (1911); of Calgary, Dr. Pinkham (1887); of Athabasca, Dr. Robins (1912); of Mackenzie River, Dr. Lucas (1913); of Yukon, Dr. Stringer (1905). All these, except Drs. Harding, Matheson, and Pinkham, have been missionaries of the C.M.S.

The Society labours in all the above-named eleven dioceses except Qu'Appelle, Edmonton, and Brandon. In RUPERT'S LAND DIOCESE the Society's work was commenced in the Red River district in 1823; and Rainy Lake district was occupied in 1874. In KEEWATIN DIOCESE, York was occupied in 1854; Fort Alexander, 1864; Churchill, 1886. In MOOSONEE DIOCESE, Moose was occupied in 1851; Albany, 1855; East Main Coast, 1877; Blacklead Island, 1894; Lake Harbour, 1909. In SASKATCHEWAN DIOCESE, Cumberland and Devon were occupied in 1840; Stanley, 1852; Sandy Lake (Asisipi), 1875; Battleford, 1877; Prince Albert, 1879; Grand Rapids, 1881; and Fort Pitt, 1888. In CALGARY DIOCESE, Fort McLeod was occupied in 1880; Blackfoot Crossing in 1883; Sarcee Reserve in 1886. In ATHABASCA DIOCESE, Chipewyan was occupied in 1867; Fort Vermilion, 1876; Lesser Slave Lake, 1886; Upper Peace River, 1888. In MACKENZIE RIVER DIOCESE, Fort Simpson, 1858; Fort McPherson, 1861; Fort Norman, 1871; Fort Resolution, 1875; Herschel Island, 1897. In YUKON DIOCESE, Rampart House, 1882; Buxton, 1887; Selkirk, 1892; Moosehide (Klondyke), 1897; Carcross, 1900.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

The majority of the Indians in North-West Canada have by this time embraced Christianity, and the work among them is largely pastoral. Many Eskimo, however, are still unreached by the Gospel, and an Arctic Mission was established in 1909 at Lake Harbour in Hudson Strait.

The Society makes a grant of £110 per annum to St. John's College, Winnipeg, and gives also £137 per annum in scholarships. Homes for Indian children are found at some stations. Medical work is carried on at Fort Pitt, in the diocese of Saskatchewan.

The Society makes grants to the salaries of five of the bishops, maintains six missionaries who are in home connexion, and assists by an annually diminishing block grant the work in eight dioceses.

Native population in the Dominion of Canada

According to a census taken in 1914 there were then 106,490 Indians and 3447 Eskimo in the Dominion of Canada, making a total native population of 109,937. No returns as to the religious belief of the Eskimo were available, or of 22,217 of the Indians. Of the remaining 84,273 Indians only 9437 (one-third of the number being in Ontario) registered themselves as pagans. In the regions in which the work of the C.M.S. has lain, namely, in Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, North-West Territories, and Yukon, there are 63,341 Indians. The census report does not state the religion of 3006 of those in British Columbia, of 1988 in Saskatchewan, or of any of the 8030 in the North-West Territories or the 1389 in Yukon. About one-eighth (6267) of the rest are returned as pagans. Among those enumerated as Christians 11,542 were Anglicans and 20,962 were Roman Catholics. A very large proportion of the Indians whose religious belief is not stated, are known to have been baptized by Protestant missionaries.

Help of Red Indians in the war

In Canada, as in all quarters of the British Empire, the outbreak of war has proved an occasion for demonstrations of loyalty on the part of the old inhabitants of the land. A number of Red Indian chiefs have sent contributions to the war funds, in many cases accompanying them by special messages. Chiefs Shot Both Sides and Ermine Horses, of the Blood Indians, sent £200 from the tribal funds as a "tangible expression of their desire that Great Britain may ever remain the guardian of the weak, and the arbiter of the world's peace"; the Blackfeet band sent £240, "for our country and her allies"; Chief Big Belly and Councillor Big Wolf, of the Sarcees, sent £100; and the Temiskaming band sent £200 "to assist in alleviating the misery caused by the European conflict, especially throughout the Belgian country." A good deal of hardship is likely to be caused to the Indians and some of the missionaries through the war, for the fur market has been ruined, and the Indians have been told at the stores that their furs will no longer be accepted in lieu of money.

Literary work

Archdeacon J. A. Mackay is the editor of a bi-monthly magazine in the Cree language, which gives items of general news and also contains articles on religious subjects. The Rev. E. J. Peck translated thirty-two of the Psalms into the Eskimo of Hudson Bay and Baffin Land.

I. DIOCESE OF RUPERT'S LAND

In the diocese of Rupert's Land the grant from the C.M.S. is applied to the support of the workers at St. Peter's Indian Settlement, Scanterbury, and Shoal River.

II. DIOCESE OF KEEWATIN

Bishop Lofthouse speaks of "steady progress everywhere" in his diocese, which is nearly 400,000 square miles in area, stretching fully 1600 miles north from the boundary of the United States of America, and extending more than 300 miles from east to west. The work now is mainly pastoral, and the Indian Christians, more especially in the north, where hitherto they have been but little affected by civilization, have many good characteristics. When Bishop Lofthouse visited Split Lake, nearly every man, woman, and child was present at the Sunday services, and twenty-five persons were presented for confirmation by the chief, who is a lay reader; while during the year the contributions of the little congregation of 340 persons, "most of them the poorest of the poor," amounted to nearly $700, that is about six shillings a head, and in addition they did a great deal of work on the church and parsonage. Again, at York Factory the number of Indians who came in for the Christmas and Easter celebrations of the Holy Communion showed no falling off, although they had no other inducement to visit the post, since the manager of the Hudson Bay Company's store had told them that there was nothing for barter, owing to the loss of the company's schooner and a change in the transport arrangements. At Port Nelson, where some of the York Factory Indians are employed in constructing a harbour, some deterioration in their behaviour was noticeable, though their devotion to their Church was unaltered; and in the district worked from Fort Alexander, while there is a steady growth in attendance at services, the presence of the miners does not help the cause of temperance. Bishop Lofthouse spent three months in visiting the northern stations in his diocese, spending a fortnight at Churchill, one of the most lonely mission stations in the world, where Mrs. F. Sevier works with her husband, with no other white woman and no doctor within 200 miles. It is proposed to establish another station 500 miles farther north, and Mr. Walter, who is to open it, got as far as Churchill on his way thither.[1]

III. DIOCESE OF MOOSONEE

Bishop Anderson inspected the stations on the Albany River and the James Bay Coast in the summer months, holding confirmations, celebrating marriages, and baptizing a number of children. The boarding school at Moose was completely destroyed by fire in March, 1914, but the principal, the Rev. W. Haythornthwaite, who has learned carpentry, vigorously set to work at rebuilding, doing much of the manual labour himself. Perhaps it is his success which makes Bishop Anderson plead for two "carpenter missionaries" on the Albany. Work among the Eskimo was in the hands of the Rev. A. L. Fleming, who, from his headquarters at Lake Harbour, travelled as far as Cape Dorset, visiting many camps of Eskimo along the Straits as well. Everywhere the people were eager to hear the Gospel, and so insistent were eleven of them in seeking baptism, that, finding they had given good evidence of their zeal and earnestness by holding services among themselves and observing Sundays, he baptized them after a special course of teaching.[1] The Eskimo are desirous of reading the Word as well as of hearing it preached. Mr. Peck speaks of an agent of the Hudson Bay Company who said that he had received a number of requests for Eskimo Testaments and hymn books from the people on the south side of Hudson Straits, and asked for one hundred copies of each, offering payment through the company. Some of the people, too, are eager to teach others what they know about the Saviour. The Rev. W. G. Walton, writing of one man, says, "There was no mistaking the joy which he had experienced in his work for God; his face was just beaming when he told me his story, leaving out the accompanying hardships." There is prospect of a further extension of the work, for a new station is contemplated at Fort Harrison, 200 miles north of Whale River, where a trading post has been established; while Professor MacMillan, the leader of the Crocker Land expedition, takes a great interest in the material and spiritual welfare of the Eskimo, and will do his best, Mr. Peck says, to evangelize the people around Smith Sound, north of Baffin Island, which he has made his head-quarters.

IV. DIOCESE OF CALGARY

A SPIRITUAL awakening took place in the winter of 1913–14 on Blackfoot Reserve through the testimony of a man who, visiting a reserve at Wolf Point, where the Presbyterians have work among the Sioux Indians, was greatly struck by the fact that no police were ever needed there. His narrative led the Blackfoot Indians to band themselves together for mutual help; the attendance at the church services doubled; two candidates came forward for baptism, and four for confirmation; and the gifts of the people increased. Half the Indians at Sarcee Reserve are Christians, and many of the others attend the Services occasionally and like to be visited; but when any suggestion is made about baptism, they only reply "Wait," without giving any reason for delay. Two women, however, were baptized in 1914. The number of the inmates of the Boarding School, St. Barnabas Home, rose from sixteen to thirty-three, and every child on the reserve who is of school age is now on the roll.

V. DIOCESE OF SASKATCHEWAN

SEVERAL of the Indian reserves in the diocese of Saskatchewan were visited in 1914 by Bishop Newnham, who speaks of marked advance at Red Pheasant's, and mentions the energy of the Indians at Sandy Lake and John Smith's Reserve in the matter of church building. He refers, as do Archdeacon Mackay, who, though in his seventy-sixth year, superintends the Indian work in the diocese, and several other workers, to the aggression of the Roman Catholic Church. The Indians are liberal in their gifts, and at Fort Pitt raised within six months the amount at which they were assessed. There is an Indian boarding school at Lac la Ronge, which is supported by a per capita grant from the Dominion Government, and another, opened in 1914, at Devon, or the Pas. The teaching is left entirely to the missionaries, subject to government inspection, and they have a perfectly free hand in the matter of religious education. The Government also maintains a number of technical schools, in which carpentry, blacksmithy, etc., are taught; and it has lately begun to establish "improved day schools," in which, as in the boarding schools, the religious teaching is practically under mission control.[1]

An assessment speedily raised

VI. DIOCESE OF ATHABASCA

THE grants of the C.M.S. are applied by Bishop Robins to the work at three stations, namely, Lesser Slave Lake, Wabaska or Wapuskaw, and White Fish Lake. After twenty years devoted labour the Rev. C. R. Weaver has resigned his position at Wabaska, and has taken up work among the Crees in Saskatchewan, where the conditions of travel are less trying. The Indian boarding schools are prosperous, that at Lesser Slave Lake having twenty-seven pupils, and at White Fish Lake seventeen pupils. Conditions are changing in the country rapidly, and there is a good deal of restlessness among the Indians, but on the whole attendance at services was good.

Indian restlessness

VII. DIOCESE OF MACKENZIE RIVER

SINCE it was too late in the year for Bishop Lucas to return to the north after his consecration at Winnipeg at the end of August, 1913, he proceeded to Eastern Canada in search of recruits, and was enabled to accept six, four of whom were Englishmen trained in Canada, and two were Canadians. One was ordained in Toronto, and two at Chipewyan, at which place one of them was stationed. A clergyman was assigned also to Fort Simpson; and Fort Norman, after the lapse of several years, again received a resident missionary. All these places were visited by Bishop Lucas, who then proceeded to Arctic Red River and Fort McPherson, his journeys during the year extending over 23,000 miles. At Arctic Red River, he met the Rev. W. H. Fry, who itinerates by boat along the coast in that region. Mr. Fry baptized twenty adults at Cape Bathurst, and on Christmas Day, 1913, conducted a special service for the Eskimo at Kittigagjuit, where Mr. W. D. Young was in charge. Many came in for a few days from their hunting and trapping, and before they left contributed nearly $200 at a thanksgiving service. Several baptisms took place at Kittigagjuit, and some couples were united in matrimony. The Rev. C. E. Whittaker has been appointed Archdeacon of the Mackenzie River.

VIII. DIOCESE OF YUKON

THERE is now no direct opposition at Moosehide, which lies three miles north of Dawson City, but the Indians continue to meet with many temptations through the action of disreputable white men who are willing to supply them with strong drink. In the absence of Bishop Stringer, Archdeacon T. H. Canham visited many of the stations in the diocese, but he was unable to go to Rampart House, on the Porcupine River, where an Indian clergyman, the Rev. A. Njootli, is in charge, and the Rev. B. Totty went in his stead. The last named found the people anxious to buy the Bibles, Prayer Books, and hymn books which he took with him. A boarding and industrial school is carried on at Carcross. The Rev. J. Hawksley, who has been working in the diocese since 1887, has accepted the office of Indian agent for the Yukon territory, with the hearty approval of Bishop Stringer, who has long felt the need of a special government agent to deal with Indian affairs.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MISSION

PAST HISTORY

In 1856 Captain Prevost, R.N., drew the Society's attention to the savage state of the Tsimshean Indians on the coast of British Columbia, and a young schoolmaster, Mr. W. Duncan, was sent out. Great blessing was vouchsafed to his labours, and in 1862 the Christian settlement of Metlakahtla was founded. In 1881, however, Mr. Duncan refused to work on the lines of the Church of England and ceased to be a missionary of the Society, and an unhappy schism among the native Christians resulted. Peace was in God's good providence ultimately restored, though at a heavy cost. Prolonged disputes about the land ensued between Mr. Duncan's Indians and the Government; and in the summer of 1887 Mr. Duncan removed with some hundreds of the Indians to a place seventy miles distant, within the United States territory of Alaska. After the departure of the disaffected party the conduct of the loyal Indians was so excellent that the government Commissioners, sent in November, 1888, to report on the condition of these disturbed districts, stated that the Metlakahtla Church Indians were in happy contrast to all others, and were a credit to their instructors.

The diocese of British Columbia was subdivided in 1879, and the Rev. W. Ridley, formerly a missionary of the Society in the Punjab, was appointed the first bishop of Caledonia, the northern division. The C.M.S. mission stations, with the exception of that at Alert Bay, are situated in the latter diocese. Bishop Ridley resigned the see in 1904, and was succeeded in that year by Bishop DuVernet.

Kincolith was occupied in 1866; Alert Bay, 1878; Hazelton, 1880; Aiyansh, 1883; and Kitkatla, 1887.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT WORK

Metlakahtla and Kitkatla are on the coast; Hazelton and Giatwangak lie on the Skeena River; and Kincolith and Aiyansh are on the Naas River. Alert Bay, on Vancouver Island, is far south of the other stations. There are industrial schools for boys and girls at Alert Bay, and at Metlakahtla the Ridley Home for white and half-breed children who attend the government school.

The missionary staff consists, besides Bishop DuVernet, of 4 clergymen, 5 missionaries' wives, and 3 single women, besides 11 Indian Christian lay agents.

Deaths of Rev. R. W. Gurd and Rev. F. B. Gribbell

THE Rev. R. W. Gurd died at Metlakahtla on 19 February, 1915. After being trained under the C.M.S. at the Preparatory Institution and Islington College, he was ordained in 1886, and sailed in that same year for British Columbia. For some time he was principal of the Preparatory Institution at Metlakahtla, but before long he was transferred to Kitkatla, where he remained until some twenty years later, on the retirement of Canon J. H. Keen, he returned to his old station as secretary of the Mission.[1]

The Rev. F. B. Gribbell, who died on 9 March, 1915, worked in the British Columbia Mission from 1865–7.

The Committee have accepted the resignation of the Rev. A. E. Price after thirty years' service.

Bishop DuVernet, who has kindly furnished the Committee with a report of the Society's work in his diocese, dwells upon the changes which he has seen in the Mission during the ten years which [1] Two of Mr. Gurd's sons, and also two of Archdeacon Collison's, have joined the Canadian contingent.

Changed conditions in British Columbia have elapsed since his consecration. Then of the ten clergymen in the diocese only three were ministering exclusively to whites; now there are twenty-one clergymen, and all but four or five are engaged chiefly among the European population. The Indians are gradually finding work with white men in lumber camps, on the railway, and on steamers, even as officers, for there is not the same prejudice against them as against Asiatics.

Pastoral work

The changes which have taken place during the decade, while they have brought material prosperity to the Indians, have not conduced to their spiritual well-being. They have generated in them self-confidence and pride, but perhaps these are only unavoidable attendants on the transitional phase through which they are passing. As the Rev. J. B. McCullagh says, "If the Indian is to develop at all, he must pass from a state of childhood and docility to the less lovely stage of youthful adolescence on his way to manhood." Mr. McCullagh gives examples of the disintegration of the old ideas which the people are experiencing. To the first converts Christianity, civilization, and the Government were identified, but now the Indian sees government agents disregarding the observance of Sunday; he finds the manufacture and sale of strong drink carried on under government licence; and, in connexion with his title to lands, he regards the Government as convicted of a gross breach of Christian ethics.[1] In former years each man had a location set apart for him on the reservation, which he cleared in the hope of getting a title to it according to the provisions of the Indian Advancement Act. But to the confusion of the Indians no title could be obtained. Mr. McCullagh thus explains the situation:—

Disintegration of old ideas

The land dispute

> The reserved lands of the province, not having been deeded over to the Dominion by the Province, were not, nor are they yet, Indian reserves in law at all; consequently they could not be handled by the Indian Department according to law—no titles or patents could be issued, and therefore no Indian could acquire a holding of land either on or off the reserve. . . . A most tiresome and dangerous agitation has sprung up which raises the whole question of the Indian title to the lands, or tribal territory, never yet surrendered under treaty with the tribe to the Crown. It is a most difficult and serious position, especially as the Provincial Government has declared that the Indians have "no case in law," which means that they never had any aboriginal title.

Clinging to Christian citizenship

> And yet, wonderful to say, amid all this disintegration of their original conception of Christianity the Indians have clung to their faith in God and their belief in the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. Like the Belgians who cling to their country, and fight for it, though it be laid in ruins, these people cling to their Christian citizenship hopefully. There is just one point on which it is necessary for the missionary to concentrate his attention at this time, viz., the transition from the idea of citizenship in the kingdom to that of membership in the mystical Body of Christ. And out of the materials of his former conception we must build up a truer conception of the Church militant here in earth; and the Indian's idea of religion must be changed from that of a thing which is an end in itself to that of a thing which is a means to an end. To my mind the work before us to-day is greater, and requires greater skill and understanding, than that which confronted us when the Indian was still in his paint and feathers.

No marked deterioration among the Indians

Bishop DuVernet concurs in the estimate that no marked deterioration has taken place among the Indians in general; and Canon Keen, referring to the temptations to which the Christians have been exposed through incoming civilization, states that although some have fallen away, the large majority have resisted the inducements held out to them, and kept true to their Christian profession.[1]

Sixty-eight confirmees

The land agitation which has been referred to continued in 1914 to divert the attention of the Indians from spiritual matters and to militate against their advance in Christian graces, and at Metlakahtla the attractions of the town band and local affairs made it difficult to influence the men; among the women, however, there was a good deal of advance at that station. Sixty-eight young people, drawn from Kincolith, Aiyansh, and Lakgalzap, were confirmed on Easter Day, 1914, at Fishery Bay, where the Indians congregate during the oolican season. Archdeacon W. H. Collison points out that last year's Report[2] did an injustice to the Kincolith Christians, for it was not they, but some of the Kitkatla Indians who joined in feasts of the old heathen character; indeed Bishop Du Vernet says that the Kincolith Christians are on the whole a credit to the Mission. An outbreak of drinking occurred at Kitkatla and Aiyansh, owing partly to the absence of the missionaries on furlough.

Evangelistic work

Evangelistic work is carried on at the fishing camps at Claxton and elsewhere, but the Japanese, especially the men, are difficult to reach, and in 1914 the Chinese were less responsive than in some previous years.
